January 21, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

The Mama Maggie's Kitchen blog site has posted a new chocolate brownie recipe. Maggie Unzueta, the blog owner who lives in Coronado, California, believes that the brownie recipe is bound to be a huge hit for everyone in the house. She states, "It's a surefire win of warm, chocolaty goodness, and perfect for a cold winter's night in."

The site offers a number of recipes from blueberry cakes to the new chocolate brownie, in addition to information on travel, wine, and a host of other topics. According to the blog, the recipe is perfect for the upcoming cold winter nights, when as Maggie puts it, "You just don't want to go out, but you want something delectable."

Those who are interested in taking a look at the recipe may do so by going to <http://inmamamaggieskitchen.com/>. The recipes offered on the site provide a complete list of ingredients as well as cooking times. Past recipes include homemade chicken stock, healthy pumpkin cookies, coconut cake, and several others. The site also offers recipes in a number of courses from meats and vegetables to desserts and in various cultures such as Chinese and Mexican.

"We just love sharing delicious recipes," states Maggie. She says that she strives to offer everything from low carb desserts to the latest in her travel adventures. She likes to provide a number of dishes that were developed in other parts of the world, aside from her home in Coronado.

Those who would like to learn more about this latest recipe can find it currently on the site, along with a host of other desserts and main courses as well as traveling tips, healthy dishes, and even a giveaway tab. Maggie states that her newest recipe is sure to be a hit with children and adults alike, and that it is an easy to create brownie that will be perfect for those cold winter nights.
