January 19, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Avasia, a business in Beaverton, OR, is proud to announce that their Avasia supplement may benefit gastric bypass patients and others. The liquid multivitamin is now used by those who have undergone bariatric surgery. It is also now being used as a prenatal or folate supplement for women trying to conceive. Many people have left positive reviews about the benefits they have experienced in taking this product, which can be seen at <http://www.amztk.com/liquidprenatal>.

Natasha Avasia, spokesperson for Avasia, says: "When we created our multivitamin liquid, we wanted to address the fact that it is now incredibly difficult to have adequate nutrition. This is mainly due to the fact that most people eat heavily processed foods, which simply do not contain the vitamins we need anymore. We are very happy to hear that people are not just benefiting from our product, but that specific conditions are being addressed as well."

Avasia has released a number of products specifically as prenatal supplements. Many are 100% certified organic and are made from non-GMO, non-gluten ingredients. Most are also vegetarian. The full range of products can be seen at <http://avasia.com/products/>.

Many gastric bypass patients have found the prenatal vitamin liquid to be beneficial to them, and it's not just limited to those who are trying to conceive. Various positive reviews have been coming in that discuss these benefits. "1 TBS and 32 servings, and it tastes good," says one happy customer. "I also have not experienced any nausea or vomiting or stomach issues after taking this. I have never tried a prenatal in a liquid form before. Guess what else its good for, someone who has had gastric bypass. It absorbs easily and there is no sugar or dumping syndrome to follow. You don't have to be prego to take this supplement...."
