

Security Expert Predicts Top Cyber Risks For 2016

January 19, 2016

January 19, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Security expert and Night Lion Security CEO Vinny Troia is pleased to announce that the firm offers solutions to some of the most common and dangerous cyber vulnerabilities. Mr. Troia is the head of a New York cyber security consulting company whose function is to serve as an ethical hacker. Recent media news stories have highlighted the many risks which are real threats either currently or in the upcoming months. Data breaches are a continuing problem, with news media reporting more and more widespread attacks. Other 2016 threats are ransomware and browser plug-ins.

According to Vinny Troia, CEO, "There is now evidence of an NSA back door in the VPN encryption that allows anyone to decrypt and read the traffic. The bug has been there for about four years and is a match to other NSA back doors previously released."

He continues, "Juniper is a major player in network equipment. It would not be a stretch to say that every company in America has some type of Juniper gear. The whole point of VPN is to encrypt traffic. Now it turns out that the NSA had a key all along."

Companies throughout the country hire the professionals at the St. Louis based digital hacking forensic investigation firm to conduct a security risk evaluation in order to determine where there may be vulnerability. Security threats come from every direction and the purpose of the IT security risk assessment is to identify and then develop counter-measures and preventative tactics to protect assets. A tailored vulnerability management program can be built or tested to identify protective measures.

The network penetration test provides a simulated attack which is similar to one which a hacker might launch. Vulnerabilities and flaws in the network and website for both internal and outward facing systems are checked for unwanted access to sensitive data. The team is able to check the risks inherent in computer systems, digital media, servers and websites.

When there is a need for emergency support due to a compromise in security, Night Lion's team is available around the clock for discreet investigation, risk elimination and resumption of normal operations as quickly as possible.
