Arrowhead Clinic, a well-known chiropractic center in Atlanta, Georgia, has recently published a blog post addressing common concerns after car accidents. The article, titled "Why Am I Shaking After a Car Accident?", offers insights into physical and emotional responses people may face after such incidents. It stresses the importance of consulting a Car Accident Doctor to manage symptoms and avoid potential long-term issues. Those interested can read more about their chiropractic care methods which discuss manual manipulation of the spine to restore and maintain optimal communication from the brain to the body on the clinic's website.

The blog post emphasizes the need to recognize and address symptoms like shaking, which may indicate shock or emotional distress. Early identification of these symptoms is important as it can help minimize their impact on health and well-being. Shaking might also be a sign of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), a condition that can occur after a traumatic event, such as a car accident. PTSD symptoms include nightmares, intrusive thoughts, and avoiding certain situations.

Dr. Summer Turner from Arrowhead Clinic shared, "The aftermath of a car accident can be overwhelming, both physically and emotionally.
