

Website Design Business In Perth Introduces Usability Design Concept

January 22, 2016

January 22, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Burning Fruit, a recently started web design company in Joondalup, Perth, WA, Australia, has announced that they offer a whole new concept for small to medium business website design. Their focus is on what is known as 'usability' design. In the past, this type of design was only available for large companies that had matching large budgets. Now, the people behind Burning Fruit web design have been able to find a way to use those same concepts in a more affordable way. This is enabling smaller businesses to access this way of building websites.

Steve Wigley from Burning Fruit says: "Keeping your web visitors on your site is critical to your business. Burning Fruit specializes in discovering what your target audience really wants, and we give it to them through our mouthwatering designs and innovative development. Our services are unique in the SME market, and our unique methodology continues to reduce bounce rates for our clients. We ensure your visitors stay on your website, and keep coming back."

The company focuses specifically on small to medium sized businesses and keeps their budget in mind. It is also for this reason that they offer usability website design in different levels and packages, thereby ensuring each business can find the right option for their specific needs and capabilities. They offer UX, Design, and Development and Copy, and each of these packages includes three different levels, as well as a custom level.

The services offered by the company have been very well received, which is quickly giving them the reputation as being the best in web design Joondalup has to offer. "As soon as I met Burning Fruit I felt I was in good hands," says Brad D. "They offered the professional, creative, technical and service driven support I was looking for. They understood the brief, provided additional advice, stayed within the given budget and time frame and delivered beyond expectations. This website is a huge step forward in setting up my own business and it is great to have a fresh, competitive and efficient website."

People are encouraged to contact the company to get more information on how they work.
