Earthling Automotive, based in San Francisco, is making strides in the auto repair industry by focusing on electric and hybrid vehicles. Known for their expertise in this area, they're working to keep up with the demand from car owners seeking greener transportation options. Earthling Automotive was founded by Carolyn Coquillette with a clear mission: to provide effective and sustainable auto repair solutions.

"The changing world of cars asks us to be both creative and flexible," said Coquillette. "Our goal is to be leaders in servicing electric vehicles and to show that sustainable auto repair practices aren't just a possibility. They're a necessity. By sharing our knowledge through training programs, we want to help the entire industry as it moves toward more environmentally friendly practices."

The company offers a variety of services, from fixing electric and hybrid cars to maintaining fleets and handling general car repairs. They are particularly skilled in servicing Tesla, Nissan Leaf, and Chevrolet Bolt models. What makes Earthling Automotive stand out is their commitment to honesty and customer satisfaction. They make service records and repair details available online for customers.

One of Earthling Automotive's major contributions to the industry is their specialized training program for electric vehicle (EV) mechanics. This program not only keeps their staff up to speed with the latest in EV technology but also opens doors for mechanics nationwide, offering them the skills needed to deal with the specific issues that come with electric cars. Their beginner Tesla repair course is a hallmark of their thorough approach to skill development in this exciting field.

Fleet maintenance is another key service offered by Earthling Automotive. They provide dependable and uniform upkeep to keep commercial vehicles in top shape, which helps businesses reduce downtime and keep operations running smoothly.
