International Boost Self-Esteem Month aims to highlight the connection between self-worth and mental health, reinforcing the need for people to build confidence and self-acceptance. The original article on this observance emphasizes how low self-esteem can contribute to clinical depression and anxiety, potentially leading to negative thought patterns that make it difficult to cope with life's challenges. Through dedicated mental health treatment, people can improve their self-image and learn strategies to combat self-doubt and insecurity.

Moment of Clarity offers outpatient mental health treatment, providing a structured yet flexible approach to mental health care that allows patients to receive professional support while maintaining their daily responsibilities. Cognitive behavioral therapy is one of the leading approaches offered at the center, helping people identify and reframe negative thought patterns that contribute to low self-esteem. This evidence-based technique is effective in depression treatment and anxiety disorder treatments, equipping people with the tools they need to challenge self-defeating beliefs and foster a healthier mindset.

Depression treatment at Moment of Clarity is designed to address both the emotional and cognitive aspects of depression, ensuring that patients receive comprehensive care tailored to their specific needs. By addressing self-worth as part of the healing process, Moment of Clarity helps patients regain confidence and restore their sense of purpose. The center's approach to anxiety disorder treatments similarly incorporates self-esteem building, recognizing that anxiety often stems from feelings of inadequacy and fear of judgment.
