

Centument Review Announces a Great New Trading Software by Gerald Reed

January 22, 2016

January 22, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Gerald Reed was a successful trader on Wall Street before taking the risk of starting his own firm, Centument Ltd. The software he created was intended to produce a trading program which would allow even novice users to grow asset balances quickly and safely.

The software program has been reviewed and praised by recognized authorities in the business, including CNNMoney, Bloomberg and Money magazine. The concept behind the software developed by Reed's firm is to make more trades, smaller trades, quicker trades and to make more profits. No trader wins all the time, but the software helps to identify the trades which permit growth of capital, even for beginning traders. The win rates for the software application on an ordinary day has shown to be 74 to 80 percent.

Professional traders who have been provided with beta testing copies of the software are enthusiastic about the results. A limited number of free copies are available. The testing process under the supervision of CySEC, an international regulatory authority, has confirmed the quality and ease of use for the Centument Asset Trading software.

The software was developed by some of the best programmers in the industry. In addition, they were often excellent traders in their own right. In the programming team were also those who were not familiar with asset trading, to reflect the viewpoint of beginners. There are plans to take the company public in the near future, so the founder is providing free copies of the software which can be downloaded and utilized within a matter of minutes. At present the software is completely free of charge. The download requires minimal information and setting up a brokerage account can be done easily with a minimal deposit.
