$310 Million Verdict Secured by Haggard Crime Victim Attorneys Against Amusement Park Ride Manufacturer

March 12, 2025

Coral Gables, Florida - March 12, 2025 -
Orlando, FL - An Orlando jury has awarded a landmark $310 million verdict in a wrongful death lawsuit against the manufacturer of a deadly amusement park ride, marking one of the largest verdicts in the history of negligent product liability cases. The Haggard Law Firm represented the family of a 14-year-old boy who tragically lost his life due to critical safety failures on the amusement ride. This verdict underscores the responsibility that ride manufacturers have in ensuring the safety of thrill-seekers and the devastating consequences of neglecting those responsibilities.

The crime victim lawsuit from an incident at a Florida amusement park, where the young victim was ejected from a free-fall ride due to a defective restraint system. Investigators determined that the manufacturer failed to implement basic safety measures that could have prevented the accident. Despite warnings and prior concerns about the ride?s safety, the company ignored industry safety standards and allowed the ride to continue operating under hazardous conditions.

Haggard Crime Victim Attorneys presented evidence demonstrating that the manufacturer knowingly designed, produced, and sold a ride with fatal flaws. Court records showed that the restraint system was inadequate to secure riders properly, particularly individuals of certain body types. Witnesses testified that the ride lacked essential secondary safety mechanisms that could have prevented ejections. The jury?s historic $310 million verdict reflects the egregious nature of the manufacturer?s negligence and serves as a warning to the amusement park industry.

Michael Haggard, Esq., managing partner and crime victim attorney at The Haggard Law Firm, emphasized the broader implications of the case, stating, ?This verdict is not just about one case?it is about holding an entire industry accountable. Amusement park manufacturers must prioritize safety over profits, and when they fail to do so, they will be held responsible. No family should ever have to suffer the devastating loss of a loved one due to preventable negligence.?

Product liability cases involving amusement rides are particularly complex, as they require demonstrating that manufacturers failed to meet industry safety standards. In this case, The Haggard Law Firm proved that the manufacturer disregarded safety warnings and chose to prioritize financial gain over customer safety. This verdict sends a strong message that corporations must adhere to strict safety regulations to prevent future tragedies.

The $310 million award not only compensates the grieving family but also sets a legal precedent for other wrongful death cases in the amusement industry. It underscores the need for stringent regulations, proper maintenance, and regular safety inspections to prevent avoidable accidents. The Haggard Law Firm has consistently fought for justice on behalf of victims of corporate negligence, ensuring that companies that cut corners and endanger lives are held accountable.

Cases like this serve a greater purpose beyond financial compensation?they drive change and encourage stronger safety measures across the industry. Families who take legal action after tragic incidents help shed light on dangerous practices and force corporations to implement stricter safety protocols, ultimately saving lives in the future.
