Knowledge Train Gains Accreditation for Updated APM PMQ Course in London, March 2025

April 24, 2025

LONDON, UK - April 24, 2025 -

Knowledge Train, a leading provider of project management training in London, has announced its accreditation to deliver the newly revised APM PMQ course. This development comes at a significant moment as the Association for Project Management (APM) has recently launched an updated syllabus for its Project Management Qualification (PMQ). The new accreditation allows Knowledge Train to offer both instructor-led and blended learning formats, ensuring that its clients benefit from the freshest content and teaching methods. The company?s strategic position in London, a hub for global business, further enhances its ability to meet the evolving needs of project management professionals in the region. This announcement underscores Knowledge Train's commitment to providing top-tier educational solutions aligned with industry standards.

The updated APM PMQ qualification reflects the latest trends and demands in project management, including significant additions to its syllabus. Jay Gao, Operations Manager at Knowledge Train, expressed his enthusiasm for the new course offering: "We are thrilled to have received accreditation for the updated APM PMQ. This positions Knowledge Train at the forefront of project management education, aligning with the APM Competence Framework and meeting the needs of today?s diverse workforce." This quote not only highlights the significance of the accreditation but also captures the excitement and anticipation surrounding the updated course, encouraging potential learners to consider this newly accredited offering.

Knowledge Train's comprehensive approach to delivering the APM PMQ includes a 5-day instructor-led course available in two flexible formats: over five consecutive days or spread across five weeks. Additionally, their blended learning option combines 35 hours of self-paced study with six live instructor-led sessions, providing a versatile learning experience. For more detailed information on these offerings, interested parties can visit Knowledge Train's official website. This accreditation not only marks a significant milestone for Knowledge Train but also reinforces its role as a leader in project management education. The updated curriculum promises to enhance the skills and knowledge of project managers across various industries.

The revised APM PMQ syllabus introduces critical new elements such as equality, diversity, inclusion, sustainability, and ethics. Jay Gao further commented, "Our accreditation allows us to deliver a curriculum that is not only more inclusive but also more aligned with the contemporary challenges faced by project managers today." By integrating these essential topics, Knowledge Train ensures that professionals are equipped to handle the complexities of modern projects. For further insights into the course structure and benefits, additional information can be accessed via Knowledge Train's course page. This update reflects a broader industry trend towards more comprehensive and inclusive educational frameworks.

The implications of this accreditation extend beyond the confines of the classroom. By offering a curriculum that addresses new industry standards, Knowledge Train allows its clients to better navigate the evolving landscape of project management. The updated APM PMQ is particularly beneficial for professionals aiming to stay competitive and relevant in an increasingly complex global market. The changes in the exam format, with its focus on multiple-choice and short-answer questions, provide a more accessible assessment method, potentially increasing the qualification's appeal to neuro-diverse individuals and non-native English speakers. This forward-thinking approach not only benefits current project managers but also sets a precedent for future educational offerings in the field.

For those seeking more information about Knowledge Train and its range of educational services, the company?s website offers a comprehensive resource. From detailed course descriptions to insights into the latest industry trends, visitors can explore how Knowledge Train continues to lead in project management training. More details can be found on their homepage, which serves as a gateway to understanding their commitment to excellence in education. As Knowledge Train continues to expand its offerings, it remains dedicated to equipping professionals with the tools needed for success in today?s dynamic work environment.
