

Lost Coffee Unveils Limited Edition Single-Origin Release: Colombia Carol Zuleta

March 27, 2025

March 27, 2025 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Lost Coffee is proud to introduce a new limited edition single-origin coffee: Colombia Carol Zuleta. Sourced from the foothills of Belén de Umbría, this small lot comes from the family-owned Finca Samaria and reflects Lost Coffee's dedication to high-quality, thoughtfully sourced beans. This release is the result of a long-standing partnership with the team at Finca Samaria, where fermentation manager Carol Zuleta has developed a distinctive double fermentation method known as the yellow honey process. This technique enhances the coffee's natural sweetness and complexity, offering a unique and memorable cup with tasting notes of tangelo orange, coriander, and dark chocolate.

Finca Samaria is a small farm rooted in family tradition and a deep commitment to quality. Over the years, it has gained recognition for producing washed, natural, and honey-processed coffees that highlight both the skill of the producers and the characteristics of the region. For this particular release, Carol Zuleta guided the coffee through a careful double fermentation process, designed to bring out nuanced layers of flavor while preserving the clarity and brightness that Colombian coffee is known for. The result is a profile that blends fruity acidity, soft spice, and rich chocolate for a well-balanced and complex experience.

This offering is about more than flavor—it's a reflection of Lost Coffee's broader mission to highlight the individuals behind every cup and to support ethically minded, community-driven producers across the globe. The Colombia Carol Zuleta release brings attention to the innovative work happening at origin and helps create direct connections between farmers and coffee lovers. By focusing on small lots like this one, Lost Coffee gives customers the opportunity to taste something rare and intentional, while also contributing to sustainable farming practices and equitable trade relationships.

"We're always looking for coffees that tell a story," said a representative from Lost Coffee. "Carol's work at Finca Samaria is inspiring, and this release is a celebration of her craft. It's the kind of coffee that stops you in your tracks and invites you to really pay attention to what's in the cup. We're honored to share it with our community."

This limited release is now available in 12oz bags while supplies last. As with all Lost Coffee offerings, quality roasting is paired with transparency and traceability, allowing customers to enjoy a beverage that supports both people and the planet. The Colombia Carol Zuleta coffee is recommended for manual brew methods such as pour-over or AeroPress, though its bold character also holds up beautifully in a traditional drip setup. No matter how it's brewed, this coffee delivers a clean, sweet, and layered profile that rewards both everyday drinkers and those who take their tasting seriously.

What makes this release particularly special is the direct collaboration with the individuals who process and care for the beans at every stage. Carol Zuleta's yellow honey process reflects not only her technical mastery but also a generational passion for coffee that runs deep in the communities of Colombia. Lost Coffee is proud to highlight her work and share it with coffee drinkers who value craftsmanship, intentional sourcing, and unique flavor experiences.

This release also serves as a reminder of the relationships Lost Coffee continues to nurture at origin—partnerships based on trust, transparency, and mutual respect. Supporting women like Carol in leadership roles within the coffee industry aligns with Lost Coffee's ongoing efforts to elevate voices that are often underrepresented in coffee production.

Lost Coffee's single-origin releases are designed to elevate the coffee experience while honoring the people and places responsible for each bean. With the Colombia Carol Zuleta release, the company continues to demonstrate that great coffee comes from great partnerships, and that those relationships are worth celebrating in every cup.
