Century Pools, a family-owned business based in Orangevale, California, has been creating high-end pool retreats in Northern California for almost sixty years. They offer a fresh line of eco-friendly in-ground pool installation choices. These options focus on using energy-efficient pumps, water-saving filtration systems, and sustainable building materials. The goal is to help homeowners cut down on utility costs and lessen their environmental impact.

"We've always been dedicated to customizing our designs to fit our clients' needs, and now we can do it with an environmentally conscious mindset," said Patrick O'Neal, a representative at Century Pools. "These new upgrades match our commitment to quality craftsmanship and also support environmental sustainability."

Today, more people are concerned about the environment, and Century Pools is responding with solutions that address this issue. By using energy-efficient pumps, they can not only reduce electricity use but also decrease monthly bills. This approach can significantly lower long-term energy expenses for homeowners. Plus, their advanced water-saving filtration systems cut down on water waste without sacrificing the in-ground pool's cleanliness and performance.

The choice of sustainable materials for this new line further shows the company's dedication to the environment. From eco-friendly decking to tough, natural finishes, these materials are designed to last, minimizing the need for frequent repairs or replacements. They are creatively integrated to fit seamlessly with existing landscapes, guaranteeing a visually appealing and cohesive look that also shows responsible building practices.

Century Pools' initiative demonstrates that luxury designs and sustainable practices can coexist. Their custom pool design services offer clients the chance to blend personal style with modern, eco-friendly options, achieving a balance between elegance and environmental concerns. This feature is becoming more significant to clients who want to enjoy a beautiful in-ground pool without feeling guilty about its environmental effects.

The company invites potential clients to take advantage of their free 3D design consultation. This service offers a visual preview of how these eco-friendly pools could look in their unique spaces, enabling personalized and informed decisions.

"As we present these sustainable alternatives, our goal is not only to meet customers' needs but to surpass their expectations," O'Neal added. "We are focused on ensuring that our customers are pleased with the aesthetics and functionality of their pools while also knowing they've made an environmentally smart decision."

Century Pools' ongoing commitment to quality doesn't stop once the installation is finished. Their support continues beyond the initial build, offering maintenance services through partnerships with Pentair Certified Technicians. These professionals help to ensure the continued high performance of eco-friendly components, making pool upkeep efficient and stress-free. This partnership assists clients in maintaining their in-ground pools with minimal environmental impact, leading to a lifetime of reduced utility costs and greener living.
