TCG Industries, a steel business in Greenfields, WA, Australia, is proud to announce that, despite the mining industry boom being over, their business continues to thrive. It is believed that one of the reasons for this is that the company is owned by a woman, which sets them apart in a male-dominated industry. In addition, the company has set itself apart as the leading expert in steel fabrication.

Sue Mason from TCG Industries says: "We specialize in manufacturing high quality steel products which exceed current Australian standards. Our company builds and delivers steel products for the Electrical, Mining, and Construction industries. We specialize in Hot Dipped Galvanizing, and our factory is fully equipped to produce reliable quality products for all our customer needs."

Some of the company's most popular products are cable drum frames and stands for electrical leads. This area of the industry continues to expand because Sue Mason has spotted a niche in the market. Her vision and expertise have enabled her to keep her company afloat when many others in the same industry have had to throw in the towel. It is believed that her sheer determination is what has enabled her to always be one step ahead of the competition.

"Being a woman in a male-dominated industry is hard work," says Sue Mason. "Taking on a position of leadership makes this even harder. However, I believe in breaking through the gender barriers and the fact that I have had to prove myself over and over again has enabled me to build such a strong, successful company."

Mason is seen as a role model, empowering women all over the world to take on jobs in industries that interest them, rather than industries that are traditionally friendly to their gender. Indeed, in the fabrication plants of TCG Industries, the percentage of the workforce that are female is also much higher than in many other similar institutions. For Mason and her team, what matters is that people show passion and proficiency. This is a strategy that has served them very well, enabling them to become a highly successful business and one of the most respected of its kind in Australia.
