

Survivors of Abuse NY Expands Legal Focus on Sexual Abuse Claims

December 12, 2025

NEW YORK, NY - December 12, 2025 -

Survivors of Abuse NY announced an expanded legal focus on representing individuals pursuing civil sexual abuse claims under New York law, reflecting recent legislative changes and continued public attention on institutional accountability. The development applies to cases involving abuse by authority figures across educational, religious, medical, and organizational settings, where survivors may face procedural and evidentiary barriers when seeking civil remedies. The firm's work is centered on navigating statutory requirements and court processes applicable to abuse-related litigation in New York.

"Changes in New York law have altered how and when survivors are able to bring civil claims, which makes accurate legal information especially important," said Thomas Giuffra, Esq., an attorney with Survivors of Abuse NY. "Our role is to assess whether claims meet legal standards and to explain available procedural options based on the facts presented."

Survivors of Abuse NY is a legal practice that focuses on civil litigation involving allegations of sexual abuse and institutional misconduct. The firm provides representation in matters where individuals allege harm resulting from actions by professionals or organizations with supervisory authority. Its legal work involves reviewing factual timelines, applicable statutes of limitations, and potential defendants under New York civil law.

New York has enacted several reforms over the past decade that affect sexual abuse litigation, including expanded statutes of limitations and revival windows for certain claims. These measures have allowed some survivors to pursue civil actions that were previously time-barred, depending on the circumstances of the alleged abuse. Courts evaluating such cases examine factors including the nature of the alleged conduct, the relationship between the parties, and whether institutions fulfilled legal duties related to supervision and reporting.

Civil sexual abuse cases often involve claims against both individual perpetrators and affiliated institutions. Litigation may assess whether organizations implemented policies, training, or oversight mechanisms consistent with regulatory or statutory obligations. Evidence in these cases can include internal records, prior complaints, employment histories, and institutional policies, all of which are subject to discovery and judicial review.

Survivors of Abuse NY reports that many inquiries involve questions about eligibility, timing, and the differences between criminal and civil proceedings. Civil claims are distinct from criminal prosecutions and may proceed regardless of whether criminal charges were filed. Remedies sought in civil cases can include monetary damages for counseling costs, medical expenses, lost income, and other legally recognized harms, as determined by the court.

The firm operates with attorneys licensed to practice law in New York and maintains a practice model focused on civil procedure rather than criminal prosecution. Case evaluations are conducted to determine whether claims meet filing requirements and evidentiary thresholds under state law. Where representation is undertaken, filings and proceedings are handled in accordance with court rules and professional conduct standards.

Survivors of Abuse NY also publishes informational materials explaining general aspects of abuse-related civil litigation, including filing timelines and procedural stages. These materials are intended to provide background context rather than legal advice and are updated to reflect statutory changes. Additional information about the firm and its legal focus is available through Survivors of Abuse NY.

The firm's legal services are offered on a contingency fee basis in applicable cases, meaning attorney fees are contingent on case outcomes, subject to written agreements and ethical requirements. Initial case reviews are conducted to determine legal viability before any representation decisions are made.
