December 16, 2025

NEW YORK, NY - December 16, 2025 -
Survivors of Abuse NY announced that attorney Thomas Giuffra is being recognized for his work representing survivors of sexual abuse in Brooklyn, New York. The announcement reflects the organization?s continuing efforts to advance awareness of survivors? rights and to strengthen accountability within institutions where abuse has occurred. The development coincides with an increase in civil actions filed under state legislation expanding opportunities for survivors to seek justice.

?Civil litigation involving sexual abuse requires a comprehensive understanding of both the law and the trauma that survivors have endured,? said Thomas Giuffra, attorney at Survivors of Abuse NY. ?Our objective is to make the civil process more accessible by ensuring individuals understand their rights and the steps involved in pursuing legal action.?

Sexual abuse cases in civil court often involve multiple layers of responsibility, extending beyond individual perpetrators to include institutions that failed to protect victims. These organizations may include schools, medical facilities, religious entities, or youth programs where authority figures hold positions of trust. Claims commonly examine whether appropriate reporting procedures were followed, whether prior warnings were ignored, and whether policies designed to prevent abuse were properly enforced. Such cases also serve an important public function by prompting reforms in oversight and supervision practices.

The legislative framework governing sexual abuse claims in New York has evolved considerably in recent years. The Child Victims Act (CVA) extended the time limits for filing civil claims involving childhood sexual abuse, giving survivors until age fifty-five or within seven years of recognizing the harm to file a lawsuit. The Adult Survivors Act (ASA) created a one-year period for adults who experienced sexual assault to bring claims that had previously been time-barred. Together, these laws have allowed thousands of survivors to seek justice in cases involving individuals and institutions that might otherwise have avoided legal scrutiny.

Litigation under these statutes has brought renewed attention to institutional accountability. Courts have reviewed cases involving allegations against schools, religious organizations, healthcare providers, and other entities with supervisory authority. In many instances, discovery has revealed patterns of misconduct or insufficient internal controls that contributed to systemic failures. Legal proceedings often focus on whether institutions acted with reasonable care, whether employees were properly screened and supervised, and whether prior complaints were addressed in compliance with mandatory reporting requirements. These examinations not only provide redress for survivors but also contribute to ongoing public efforts to prevent future abuse.

Survivors of Abuse NY provides resources that explain the legal process and available remedies under New York law. The firm?s attorneys guide clients through each stage of litigation, from initial investigation and filing to resolution. The organization also conducts educational outreach programs designed to inform the public about legal developments, victims? rights, and procedural changes that affect survivors. Through these initiatives, Survivors of Abuse NY aims to promote broader understanding of how civil law functions as a mechanism for accountability.

Attorney Thomas Giuffra?s recognition highlights ongoing efforts within the state to strengthen the legal structures that protect survivors and to reinforce institutional responsibility. The continued collaboration among legal professionals, advocacy groups, and policymakers is expected to influence future legislation, expand awareness of survivors? rights, and improve systems for reporting and responding to abuse. These developments illustrate how the civil justice process can serve as a catalyst for reform across educational, medical, and organizational settings.
