October 01, 2025

LONDON, UK - October 01, 2025 -

Agile consultancy firm agileKRC has unveiled its new website (agilekrc.net) in London, England this October 2025, highlighting their extensive range of agile consulting, training, and coaching services that pre-date the Agile Manifesto itself. The website serves as a comprehensive platform for organisations of all sizes seeking to enhance their business agility through expert guidance and practical methodologies. With a history dating back to 1995, agileKRC offers a balanced approach to agile implementation that combines traditional best practices with innovative techniques, helping organisations transform how they achieve results in an increasingly competitive business landscape. The launch represents a significant milestone for the pioneering firm as they continue to expand their award-winning services across various sectors, from government agencies to multinational corporations.

"Our new website reflects our commitment to providing accessible, practical agile solutions that genuinely work in real-world environments," states Jay Gao, Operations Manager at agileKRC. "What sets us apart is our pragmatic philosophy that agile methodologies must be applied carefully and in harmony with existing best practices. We've been in this field since before the Agile Manifesto was written, giving us unparalleled experience in understanding what truly works for different organisational structures and challenges. The new platform allows visitors to explore our full range of services while highlighting our unique approach that balances agile innovation with proven methodologies. We're particularly proud of how the site showcases our track record of success with clients ranging from the British Red Cross to the European Space Agency."

For more information about agileKRC's comprehensive agile services, interested organisations can visit agilekrc.net, where they can explore the full spectrum of consulting, coaching, and training options available. The newly designed website features detailed case studies demonstrating successful agile transformations across various industries, providing valuable insights for businesses considering similar journeys. Visitors can also learn about agileKRC's award-winning training programmes, which have earned recognition for their effectiveness and practical application. The site emphasises the company's commitment to a listening-first approach, where understanding client needs precedes any recommendations or solutions. This customer-centric methodology has been central to agileKRC's success since its founding in 1995 and continues to guide their work with organisations seeking genuine business agility rather than simply adopting agile methodologies without proper integration.

"What truly differentiates our approach is our willingness to challenge conventional wisdom when it doesn't serve our clients' best interests," explains Jay Gao. "The new website articulates how we take time to listen and understand specific organisational challenges before offering tailored solutions based on our extensive real-world experience. We've observed that many organisations struggle with agile implementation because they follow prescriptive approaches that don't account for their unique circumstances. Our balanced methodology addresses this common pitfall by integrating agile principles with existing best practices in ways that create sustainable results." The approach has proven successful across hundreds of organisations, as evidenced by agileKRC's recognition as a Leader for Agile Project Management training in the Trusted Training Radar® reports for three consecutive years from 2018 to 2020. Interested parties can find additional information about these accolades and client success stories on agileKRC's corporate site.

The timing of this website launch coincides with a growing demand for practical agile expertise as more organisations recognise the limitations of one-size-fits-all agile implementations. Industry analysts predict that companies taking a balanced approach to agile adoption, as advocated by agileKRC, will see significantly higher success rates in their digital transformation efforts over the next five years. The new website positions agileKRC to meet this increasing demand by clearly articulating their pragmatic philosophy and showcasing their extensive experience with clients across diverse sectors. As businesses continue to navigate rapidly changing market conditions, the need for agile methodologies that can be adapted to specific organisational contexts becomes increasingly critical. agileKRC's pioneering work in this field places them at the forefront of this evolving landscape.

For organisations interested in learning more about agileKRC's agile consulting, coaching, or award-winning training services, comprehensive information is available on their new website. The site provides detailed descriptions of their service offerings, client testimonials, and contact information for arranging initial consultations. With a track record spanning over three decades and experience working with hundreds of organisations across various sectors, agileKRC continues to lead the field in practical, results-oriented agile implementation.
