September 19, 2025 -

Ethical Plumbing, a family-owned plumbing service provider based in Taylors, South Carolina, announced today the expansion of its service coverage to include additional communities throughout Greenville, Mauldin, and the greater Upstate region. The expansion addresses increasing demand for professional plumbing services in these areas while adding capacity to serve more residential customers.

The plumbing company in Taylors has deployed additional certified Master Plumbers to support the expanded service territory, which now encompasses a broader geographic area across Upstate South Carolina. The expansion enables the company to provide leak detection, water quality assessment, crawl space moisture protection, and emergency plumbing services to an estimated 15,000 additional households in the region.

"The expansion represents a strategic response to service requests we have received from communities beyond our traditional coverage area," said a spokesperson for Ethical Plumbing. "By extending our service territory, we can now dispatch certified Master Plumbers to more locations while maintaining our standard response times for both scheduled and emergency calls."

The company currently holds an A+ rating from the Better Business Bureau and maintains required state licensing and insurance coverage for all service areas. According to HomeAdvisor data, the company has received positive feedback from previous customers, though specific metrics vary by reporting period.

The expanded service offerings include plumbing repair, installation, replacement, and inspection services. The company's Master Plumbers are certified to perform sewer line repairs, trenchless sewer repair, and hydro-jetting services. Additional services include water softener installation, vapor barrier installation, and crawl space encapsulation, which address common moisture and water quality concerns in the region.

The plumbers in Taylors operate on a 24-hour emergency service schedule, recognizing that plumbing failures can occur outside standard business hours. The company provides written estimates before beginning work and offers multiple repair options when applicable.

The geographic expansion coincides with increased construction activity in the Upstate region, where new residential developments have created demand for plumbing services. The South Carolina Department of Labor, Licensing and Regulation reports that licensed plumbing contractors in the state must maintain specific insurance requirements and demonstrate technical competency through certification programs.

The expansion has created four new full-time positions within the company, contributing to local employment in the trades sector. The company reports that all technicians complete ongoing training to maintain certifications and stay current with plumbing code requirements.

Ethical Plumbing was established as a locally owned, family-operated business serving the Taylors area. The company provides residential plumbing services including water heater installation and repair, gas line detection and repair, outdoor plumbing, kitchen and bathroom plumbing, pipe services, septic systems, and drain and sewer solutions. The company operates from its base in Taylors and dispatches service vehicles throughout the announced coverage area.
