

A&M Roofing Announces Expanded Roof Replacement Services

September 25, 2025

SPRINGFIELD, VA - September 25, 2025 -
A&M Roofing, an exterior home services company, announced today the expansion of its roof replacement offerings following recent renewals of manufacturer accreditations from multiple shingle producers. The Springfield-based company has added synthetic slate and metal roofing options to its service portfolio as part of a broader initiative to meet evolving homeowner needs in the region.

The expansion comes as the company marks nearly twenty years of operations in Northern Virginia, where it provides roofing, siding, windows, doors, skylights, and gutter system installations. The company maintains an A+ Better Business Bureau rating and holds certifications from manufacturers, including Velux for skylights and Mastic for siding products.

"The addition of synthetic slate and metal roofing options reflects changes we're seeing in homeowner preferences and building material technology," said Mark Collins, spokesperson for A&M Roofing. "These materials offer different performance characteristics compared to traditional asphalt shingles, particularly in terms of longevity and weather resistance, which are important considerations for Northern Virginia's climate."

The expanded roofing services now include asphalt shingles, synthetic slate, flat roofing systems, and metal roofing installations. Each material option requires specific installation techniques and manufacturer certification, which the company has obtained through training programs with product manufacturers. The synthetic slate products replicate the appearance of natural slate while weighing significantly less, making them suitable for homes not structurally designed for traditional slate roofing.

As Northern Virginia residents have utilized A&M Roofing's siding services for exterior renovations, the company also installs Mastic siding from Ply Gem and James Hardie fiber cement products. These siding materials are engineered for durability in varying weather conditions and require minimal maintenance after installation. The company's certification as a Mastic Preferred Contractor indicates completion of manufacturer training requirements for product installation.

The company's window and door services feature products from ProVia and Simonton, manufacturers that produce energy-efficient designs meeting Energy Star requirements. The skylight installations utilize Velux products, including solar-powered models with integrated rain sensors. Gutter services include on-site fabrication of seamless aluminum systems in five and six-inch configurations.

In a 5-star review, an A&M Roofing customer used the company's services for siding, shutters, and a new roof. The customer highlighted their professionalism and the updated look of the house. As a locally owned company, A&M Roofing understands Northern Virginia's varied housing market, with homes built across multiple decades. The company has varied roofing replacement needs based on original construction materials and methods.

"Manufacturer accreditation programs require ongoing training and adherence to specific installation protocols," added Collins. "These requirements help ensure that warranty coverage remains valid and that installations meet current building codes and industry standards."

The company maintains memberships in the Virginia Association of Roofing Professionals and the Northern Virginia Chamber of Commerce. These professional affiliations provide access to continuing education programs and updates on building code changes affecting exterior home improvements.

A&M Roofing serves residential properties throughout Northern Virginia from its Springfield location. The company provides estimates and consultations for exterior home improvement projects, with services available for both planned renovations and emergency repairs.
