

A&M Roofing Expands Metal Panel Roofing Solutions

September 25, 2025

MCLEAN, VA - September 25, 2025 -
A&M Roofing, a McLean-based roofing contractor with over two decades of service in Northern Virginia, has expanded its metal panel roofing installations to meet growing demand for durable, energy-efficient roofing solutions throughout the region. The company reports a significant increase in requests for metal roofing systems as property owners seek long-term alternatives to traditional asphalt shingles.

The expansion comes as Northern Virginia experiences increased severe weather events and homeowners prioritize roofing materials that offer superior longevity and weather resistance. Metal Panel Roofs have emerged as a preferred choice for both residential and commercial properties, offering lifespans that can exceed 50 years with proper maintenance compared to the 15-20 year typical lifespan of traditional roofing materials.

"Property owners throughout Northern Virginia are recognizing that metal roofing represents a smart long-term investment," said Mark Collins, senior roofing consultant at A&M Roofing. "The initial investment in metal roofing systems pays dividends through reduced maintenance costs, improved energy efficiency, and exceptional durability that stands up to our region's variable weather conditions."

The company's expanded metal roofing services include standing seam panels, corrugated metal options, and stone-coated steel systems. Each system is installed by certified technicians who have completed specialized training in metal roofing installation techniques. The expansion also includes enhanced inspection services using HAAG-certified technicians to assess existing roofs and determine optimal replacement timing.

Roofers in Northern Virginia face unique challenges due to the region's climate variations, from summer heat and humidity to winter ice and snow. A&M Roofing's metal roofing solutions address these challenges through materials engineered to reflect solar heat in summer while providing superior insulation during winter months. The company reports that clients with metal roofs typically see energy cost reductions of 10-25 percent annually.

The expanded service offerings come at a time when the roofing industry has seen technological advances in metal roofing materials, including improved coating systems that enhance durability and color retention. These developments have made metal roofing increasingly accessible to a broader range of property owners seeking alternatives to conventional roofing materials.

Beyond metal roofs, A&M Roofing continues to provide comprehensive roofing services including new installations, complete replacements, storm damage repair, and routine maintenance. The company also offers gutter, siding, window, and door services to provide complete exterior solutions for property owners.

A&M Roofing has served the Northern Virginia community for more than twenty years, establishing itself as a provider of residential and commercial roofing services. The company maintains full licensing and insurance coverage, with all technicians holding appropriate industry certifications. Based in McLean, the company serves property owners throughout Northern Virginia, providing roofing solutions backed by quality materials and professional installation standards. The company's service portfolio encompasses both traditional and modern roofing systems, with specialized expertise in metal panel installations that meet current building codes and energy efficiency standards.
