Dr. Satty Hira, a dentist at the Mulgrave Dental Centre in Sutton, Surrey, United Kingdom, recently warned patients of the risks of not properly looking after their dental implants. Dr. Hira says that while those that are well-cared for can potentially last a lifetime, those that are not cared for have a much shorter lifespan. He also states that not following proper oral health can be dangerous to patients.

"What a vast number of dental patients do not realise is that good oral hygiene is compulsory for getting a long service from dental implants," says Dr. Hira. Dr. Hira has been placing these implants in patients for quite some time, and says that he wants patients to enjoy their new, healthy smiles, without the risks that are associated with poor oral hygiene.

The dentist states that with dental implants Sutton patients have a great substitute for fallen teeth as they are fixed into the jaw bone. They feel so much like a normal tooth that a patient can almost be forgiven for forgetting that these do require some extra care and attention in order to get a long lasting service from them.

Dr. Hira says, "Besides informing my dental implants patients about good dental hygiene, I also recommend visiting your implants dentist for regular checkups to ensure that any potential complications are identified early and taken care of. Most patients go on to have fantastic enjoyment from their dental implants provided they care for and look after their dental implants properly."

The dentist reminds dental implants Surrey patients to follow the routine provided to them by their dental surgeon following implant surgery. He says that all dentists should offer information to patients on how to properly care for their implants, as well as general dental hygiene.

Dr. Hira says that patients who do not care properly for their implants could risk losing them as gums become unhealthy and fail to properly support the implant, much as patients risk losing their natural teeth if they are not cared for properly. Dr. Hira states that his staff are more than happy to help patients with their oral health following implant insertion.
