February 29, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Lancaster, PA based company, Keystone In-Home Care has recently released new information regarding their private home care services and government funded programs. The home care company works in conjunction with a number of government programs such as the Pennsylvania Aging Waiver Program, the OPTIONS Program, and the VA Referral Program.

Sue Hehnly, a spokesperson for the company, states, "We believe in providing only the best possible services to our clients, and strive to offer services that meet the specific and unique needs of each of our seniors."

Hehnly states that by offering services in conjunction with various government private home care programs, they can more readily meet the needs of clients in the Lancaster area. The company's website offers information regarding each of the offered government programs, as well as more information on how to apply.

The Pennsylvania Aging Waiver Program is a long-term living program, and the OPTIONS Program provides assessment to help seniors determine what specific services they may need. The VA Referral Program works with veterans in helping them to locate and secure home health aide services as an alternative to nursing home care.

Hehnly says that each of these offered programs can be beneficial in some way to seniors, and that those interested should visit the company's website to read through the newly offered information as well as other information regarding senior caregiver resources.

Maggie Gross, President of Keystone In-Home Care says about the company, "We believe mental and physical well-being and quality of life are enhanced when a senior can live in familiar surroundings - the place they call home. We also believe that each senior has unique requirements and needs. With your help, we will create an individualized plan of care to provide the right care for you."

The home care company works with a number of programs to offer seniors the best in home care. More about the government programs that are currently available or general information about Keystone In-Home Care and the kind of services that they provide can be seen on their official website or on their Twitter page at <https://twitter.com/keystoneihc>.
