Post Electric Expands Residential Outlet Installation Services to Address Growing Electrical Safety Concerns

September 30, 2025

Monett, MO - September 30, 2025 -
Post Electric, a licensed electrical contractor serving Southwest Missouri, has expanded its residential electrical services to address increasing concerns about outdated wiring and insufficient outlet capacity in homes throughout the region. The expansion comes in response to a notable rise in service calls related to overloaded circuits and aging electrical infrastructure in residential properties.

The enhanced service offerings position Post Electric to better serve homeowners dealing with the electrical demands of modern households, where the average home now contains three times as many electronic devices as it did two decades ago. The company has invested in advanced diagnostic equipment and expanded its team's expertise in residential electrical system upgrades, particularly focusing on homes built before 1990 that may not meet current electrical safety standards.

"We're seeing more homeowners recognize that their electrical systems haven't kept pace with their technology needs," said Ryan, lead electrician at Post Electric. "Many homes in Southwest Missouri were built when families had far fewer electrical devices. Today's households require more outlets, better circuit distribution, and updated wiring to safely power everything from home offices to entertainment systems."

As a Post Electric Residential Electrician team member explained, the company has documented a 40 percent increase in requests for electrical system evaluations over the past eighteen months. Many of these assessments reveal inadequate outlet placement, outdated wiring materials, and circuits operating near or above safe capacity levels. The expansion of services allows the company to provide comprehensive solutions ranging from simple outlet additions to complete electrical panel upgrades.

The timing of this service expansion aligns with recent data from the Electrical Safety Foundation International, which reports that electrical failures or malfunctions are the second leading cause of home fires in the United States. Older homes with original wiring systems face particular risks, especially when homeowners use power strips and extension cords as permanent solutions to insufficient outlet availability.

Post Electric Electrical Wiring services now include thorough home electrical audits that identify potential safety hazards and efficiency improvements. The company's technicians evaluate existing wiring conditions, test outlet functionality, measure circuit loads, and provide detailed recommendations for bringing residential electrical systems up to current safety standards. This systematic approach helps homeowners prioritize necessary upgrades while planning for future electrical needs.

The expanded services also address the growing trend of home-based businesses and remote work arrangements, which often require dedicated circuits for office equipment and enhanced electrical capacity in previously underutilized spaces. Post Electric's team works with homeowners to design electrical solutions that accommodate both current needs and potential future requirements.

Post Electric has served Southwest Missouri for over fifteen years as a family-owned and operated electrical contractor. The company provides residential, commercial, and industrial electrical services throughout the region, including Pierce City, Verona, Aurora, Cassville, Springfield, Mount Vernon, Ozark, and Monett. Licensed and fully insured, Post Electric maintains a commitment to using high-quality materials and current industry techniques while offering 24-hour emergency services and a one-year workmanship warranty on all installations.
