(Glendora, CA) - Rooter Hero Plumbing in the San Gabriel Valley, headquartered out of Glendora, CA, is drawing attention to their services designed to help residential and commercial builders address drought conditions that have affected the state in recent years. Droughts are becoming increasingly problematic in California and some municipalities have suggested putting the brakes on new construction to minimize additional strain on a dwindling water supply. The solution to this problem from Rooter Hero Plumbing's perspective isn't to stop new builds, but to work with builders to find cost-effective systems that use less water with lessening convenience.

Jessica Perrault, spokeswoman for Rooter Hero Plumbing of the San Gabriel Valley, says: "Thanks to advances in plumbing technology, there are quite a few options to conserve water not only in new structures, but existing ones as well. All it requires is strategic planning and design. For example, new water heater standards make it easier to use less water as do a range of other products and services that have been developed over the past several years. Preserving natural resources is important to us at Rooter Hero Plumbing and we encourage residential and commercial builders to contact us to discuss how they can address the problem of drought in the San Gabriel Valley."

Rooter Hero Plumbing is making a number of concerted efforts to protect the environment. Water consumption is, naturally, their main area of focus. They also have extensive knowledge on LEED certification, which further helps to protect the environment. In the San Gabriel Valley, droughts are quite severe and it is vital that everybody plays a part in conserving water wherever possible, for instance by having more efficient upgrades in bathrooms and kitchens.

As a high-quality commercial plumbing company in the San Gabriel Valley, the company feels that they have a responsibility to encourage others to become more sustainable and to be aware of how their water usage affects the planet as a whole. They feel that property builders need to know about more environmentally friendly technology in terms of their plumbing needs. In encouraging this type of technology, they will play a part in solving problems brought about by one of the worst droughts on record in the state of California as well. By conserving water and using less water at the same time, a real difference could be made.
