Arrowhead Clinic Chiropractor McDonough has released comprehensive educational resources addressing a critical health concern affecting thousands of Georgia accident victims each year - the delayed onset of injury symptoms following vehicular collisions. This comprehensive resource details the critical first 72 hours following an accident and explains diagnostic procedures used to identify hidden injuries.

The McDonough chiropractic facility reports an increasing number of patients seeking treatment days or weeks after accidents, often experiencing complications that could have been prevented with immediate care. The clinic indicates that many accident victims who delay treatment develop chronic pain conditions within six months of their initial injury.

Dr. Robbyn Keating, lead chiropractor at Arrowhead Clinic McDonough, explains the physiological reasons behind delayed symptom presentation. "The human body releases adrenaline and endorphins during traumatic events like car accidents, which can mask pain and injury symptoms for hours or even days," stated Dr. Keating. "This natural response, while protective in the immediate aftermath, often leads patients to believe they are uninjured when micro-tears in muscles, spinal misalignments, and internal inflammation are already developing."

The clinic has documented common delayed symptoms, including neck pain and stiffness appearing 24 to 72 hours post-accident, progressive headaches developing over several days, shoulder and upper back discomfort emerging gradually, and neurological symptoms such as numbness or tingling in extremities manifesting days after the initial trauma. Additional concerns include cognitive symptoms like difficulty concentrating and mood changes that may not be immediately associated with physical trauma. The McDonough facility maintains same-day appointment availability specifically for accident victims, recognizing that early intervention significantly impacts long-term recovery outcomes. Treatment protocols focus on addressing both apparent and potential hidden injuries through advanced diagnostic imaging, comprehensive physical examinations, and personalized treatment plans designed to prevent acute injuries from developing into chronic conditions.

Dr. Keating emphasizes the long-term implications of delayed treatment. "When patients wait weeks to seek care, simple soft tissue injuries can develop into complex chronic pain syndromes requiring extensive rehabilitation. Early intervention allows us to address inflammation, restore proper spinal alignment, and prevent the formation of problematic scar tissue that can limit mobility and cause ongoing discomfort."

A recent McDonough Arrowhead Clinic patient review highlighted the importance of immediate care, with one patient noting significant improvement after seeking treatment within 24 hours of their accident, compared to previous experiences where delayed treatment led to months of unnecessary pain and limited mobility.
