Atlas Restaurant In Petts Wood Kent Reopens Its Doors

April 15, 2015

April 15, 2015 -
Atlas restaurant in Petts Wood, Kent, United Kingdom, has reopened its doors after a full refurbishment. The Atlas Restaurant Moccocan Restaurant now once again offers a full breakfast, lunch and dining experience to its customers, with a menu full of traditional Moroccan and Mediterranean dishes. It is hoped that the new refurbishment will attract a greater deal of customers and introduce Petts Wood to more international dishes.

"Morocco is known for its fantastic cooking," says Mo from Atlas Restaurant. "Most people have heard of the tagine, but we also offer a range of other traditional dishes that are guaranteed to excite the taste buds. Enjoyed in our new, comfortable surroundings, we know people will love coming here for any meal."

The restaurant offers an extensive menu of Moroccan dishes for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Each dish is made to the highest quality standards and uses all natural ingredients straight out of Morocco. The country is becoming a highly popular tourist destination and people are actively looking to bring a taste of the North African country into their own homes.

"We ask our customers to contact us if they have any questions about our menu, how we cook it or what our ingredients are," adds Mo. "They can also contact us to make a reservation, although we also welcome diners without reservation. Thanks to our new refurbishment, we have plenty of space to welcome one and all."

Morocco is a fascinating country that is a mix and mash of various cultures and histories. This can be seen in their architecture, their style of living and clothing, and in their food. In the creme brulee, for instance, a sugary dessert based mainly on vanilla and egg, strong French influences are seen. Yet in the couscous and heavy usage of certain spices, strong Arabian influences can be found. The country is truly unique in the world, in part due to the fact that it retained independence throughout most of its history, while at the same time enjoying friendly trade agreements, not unlike Thailand. As a result, it has had the opportunity to develop unique flavors, sounds and colors, and Atlas Restaurant is trying to bring this feeling to the United Kingdom.

One method that is being employed to bring further custom to the restaurant itself is a stronger focus on social media. As such, they now also have a Google+ account for customers to visit, which also allows them to leave reviews and comments about their dining experience. The business owners believe that engaging directly with customers in this manner will help to build up their already excellent reputation.

The restaurant is beautifully and comfortably set out since the refurbishment. To diners, it feels as if they have stepped out of Europe and into the Maghreb for just a little while. The staff is friendly and the food is excellent and tasty. Please check out their Google+ account for further information or use the contact details below.
