McDougall Law Firm Addresses South Carolina's Second-Highest Traffic Fatalities Rate in Nation

November 24, 2025 -
McDougall Law Firm, a Beaufort-based personal injury practice, is highlighting alarming new data showing South Carolina maintains the second-deadliest roads in America, with 20.4 deaths per 100,000 population according to recent federal transportation statistics.

The sobering figures reveal that one person dies in a South Carolina traffic accident every 7.9 hours, while an accident occurs somewhere in the state every 3.6 minutes. An accident involving injury happens every 14.4 minutes across South Carolina highways and roads. Only Mississippi records a higher death rate at 22.2 per 100,000 population.

These statistics take on particular significance for Beaufort and Lowcountry residents who navigate roads shared with tourist traffic from neighboring states. The region's mix of local commuters, seasonal visitors, and through-traffic creates complex driving conditions that contribute to the state's troubling safety record.

"Behind every statistic is a family whose life has been forever changed," said J. Olin McDougall, II, founding attorney at McDougall Law Firm. "When we see that South Carolina ranks second nationally for traffic deaths, we're not just looking at numbers. We're seeing parents, spouses, and children who need legal advocacy to help them rebuild after devastating losses."

The firm, which has served Beaufort County for over 15 years, emphasizes that understanding South Carolina's unique legal landscape becomes critical when pursuing compensation after serious accidents. State-specific insurance regulations, comparative negligence laws, and statutory deadlines all factor into successful personal injury claims.

As a McDougall Law Firm car accident lawyer explains, the complexity of South Carolina accident cases often requires extensive knowledge of both state law and local court procedures. The firm handles various accident types including car, truck, motorcycle, pedestrian, and bicycle incidents, along with cases involving commercial vehicles and rideshare accidents.

The heightened risk on South Carolina roads affects every community, but areas like Beaufort face additional challenges from seasonal population changes and varying traffic patterns throughout the year. Interstate corridors and coastal highways see significant fluctuations in traffic volume, creating conditions where accidents become more likely.

For families dealing with accident aftermath, finding a suitable car accident attorney can determine whether they receive fair compensation for medical expenses, lost wages, and other damages. South Carolina law provides specific protections for accident victims, but navigating these provisions requires thorough understanding of state statutes and case precedents.

McDougall Law Firm operates on a contingency fee basis, meaning clients pay no fees unless the firm wins their case. The practice offers consultations at no charge and virtual meeting options to accommodate clients recovering from injuries.

The firm maintains offices in Beaufort and provides comprehensive personal injury representation including workers' compensation claims, medical malpractice cases, and mass tort litigation. Their legal team handles negotiations with insurance companies and pursues maximum compensation available under South Carolina law, offering resources such as assistance obtaining police reports and guidance through the claims process.
