1st Family Dental, a dental practice located in Chicago, Illinois, has published a new blog post regarding what people often believe about dental implants. The practice states that the post revolves around why people do not choose dental implants and why they are wrong in their decision.

Vicky Khawaja, a spokesperson for the dental practice states, "We think that this information is important, particularly for those who are not familiar with implants or those who may have questions about the procedure, the cost, or other aspects of the surgery."

The blog post is titled "Dental Implants, Yes or No? The 4 Stories People with Missing Teeth Tell Themselves About Dental Implants" and covers a number of specific topics about the surgery, answering various questions that patients may have prior to scheduling this type of procedure. One specific topic that is addressed is cost. The clinic states that they have many patients who feel that dental implants may be too expensive or who are completely unaware of the cost. In the blog post, it states, "The inability to eat and chew healthy food due to a lack of teeth can have a direct impact on our weight, our digestive system, and truly our whole body health. So then, how much will living with missing teeth cost us on our health care expenses over our lifetime?"

The post states that going without teeth, for whatever reason, can be much more costly in the long run than paying for dental implant surgery. It also outlines what implants are, how they are constructed, and how they are attached to the jawbone.

The Chicago dental clinic provides a number of general dentistry as well as orthodontic procedures. With several doctors on staff, as well as orthodontists and dental hygienists and assistants, the dental practice states that they can handle virtually any dental issue that a patient may be facing.

The dental implant blog post is the latest on the practice's blog page and staff members state that the blog is updated regularly to provide patients with a wealth of information regarding their dental health as well as cosmetic procedures that may interest them. The blog post can be viewed in its entirety on the dental practice's official website, http://1stfamilydental.com.
