TLC Plumbing Heating Cooling Electrical Recognized for Outstanding Customer Reviews Across New Mexico

November 18, 2025

ALBUQUERQUE, NM - November 18, 2025 -
TLC Plumbing Heating Cooling Electrical, an Albuquerque-based service provider operating since 1987, is reporting a continued pattern of positive customer feedback across its plumbing, heating, cooling, and electrical divisions. The company currently holds a high volume of public reviews on major platforms, including Google, where it maintains strong rating averages supported by consistent year-over-year engagement. The organization is also accredited by the Better Business Bureau and has been recognized by the Albuquerque Journal as a leading plumbing service provider.

TLC?s leadership attributes the sustained feedback to long-term investment in technician training, licensing compliance, and 24/7 service availability throughout Albuquerque and Rio Rancho. All technicians meet state licensing and safety requirements, with training programs designed to support skill development across plumbing, HVAC, and electrical work.

Across the past year, customer reviews have frequently referenced communication, timeliness, and clarity during service calls. While individual experiences vary, a sampling of recent comments reflects recurring themes related to professionalism and explanation of service options. For example, reviewers have noted when technicians took the time to explain repair processes or follow up on completed work. These examples align with the company?s stated emphasis on transparent service and clearly outlined estimates.

Dale Armstrong, owner of TLC, said that direct feedback continues to play a central role in operational improvements. ?Customer input allows us to evaluate our performance across all departments. We review this information regularly to help guide training and internal standards,? Armstrong said. He added that the company?s approach remains focused on reliability, safety, and clarity during service interactions.

TLC reports that plumbing, heating, cooling, and electrical requests remain the most common service categories among residential and commercial customers. According to internal data, emergency calls?particularly for burst pipes, furnace failures, and electrical issues?contribute significantly to after-hours demand. The company notes that New Mexico?s seasonal temperature swings continue to influence the volume of calls related to HVAC repair and maintenance.

In addition to customer feedback, TLC cites third-party benchmarks to contextualize its performance. The company retains BBB accreditation and maintains a longstanding presence in the region, with more than 35 years of continuous operation. TLC was also highlighted in community voting initiatives, including recognition by the Albuquerque Journal for plumbing services.

As New Mexico?s communities expand, TLC plans to continue evaluating public feedback and industry standards to guide future improvements. The company will also maintain its focus on technician certification, licensing, and ongoing training, which leadership identifies as central to its service model.
