

New Analysis Highlights Challenges Asian Men Face on Modern Dating Apps

November 19, 2025

Seattle, Washington - November 19, 2025 -
Based Dating, founded by dating app photographer and strategist Vincent Chan, has seen increasing visibility among Asian men seeking structured guidance on modern online dating. With a system informed by lived experience and years of testing, Chan has become a resource for individuals who want to improve their presentation on dating apps through photography, profile development, and practical strategy.

Chan?s work is informed by his own background as an Asian man navigating the challenges of digital dating. His personal account of this journey is detailed on the Why I Became an Asian Dating Coach page on the Based Dating website, where he outlines the cultural, social, and algorithmic barriers that many Asian men encounter on modern platforms. His framework draws from that experience and focuses on clear, repeatable methods rather than general advice. Chan notes that many clients share similar patterns in their experiences, which has helped shape a framework grounded in observations across diverse age groups and professional backgrounds.

Asian men often report lower match rates on major dating apps compared to other demographics, a pattern documented across multiple industry studies and surveys. According to Chan, this gap can create a cycle of frustration, especially for men in demanding careers who have limited time to experiment with photos, bios, or messaging. His approach aims to streamline this process through structured planning, visual clarity, and guidance on how to present authenticity and confidence without relying on trends or scripted tactics.

?The issues many Asian men face on dating apps are not imagined. They reflect broader patterns in how attraction is shaped online,? Chan said. ?My goal is to help men who have felt overlooked understand the factors at play and build a profile that communicates who they are in a way that stands out.?

The system is designed to provide structured guidance for individuals navigating the complexities of dating apps in major urban environments. Chan?s work in cities such as San Francisco places particular emphasis on markets with a high concentration of technology professionals, where dating app competition is especially strong. His approach includes planning sessions, photography based on natural presentation, and support on how to write prompts and communicate effectively through messaging.

In San Francisco, Chan has worked with clients from industries such as engineering, finance, and biotechnology. Many of them sought assistance after experiencing a lack of traction on dating apps despite stable careers and active lifestyles. Through Based Dating, they receive a process that focuses on clarity of presentation and consistency across the visual and written parts of their profiles. This method has contributed to the brand?s ongoing visibility in both San Francisco and other major U.S. cities.

More information about Chan?s work can be found on the Based Dating website, including the San Francisco Dating App Photographer page and his personal article on becoming an Asian dating coach, which outlines the motivations and guiding principles behind the system.
