

Survival Seed Vault Released To Provide Seeds For Survivalists and Gardening Enthusiasts

March 15, 2016

March 15, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Home and Garden America, a Carson City, Nevada based company, has announced that their Survival Seed Vault has been released onto the Amazon marketplace, and that new orders will be taken beginning in March 2016. The seed vault comes packaged in an ammo box and contains a variety of seeds and growing supplies. Chuck Harmon, spokesperson for Home and Garden America states, "We had such a great response when we initially launched the product, that we thought we would do a re-launch to make everyone aware of it."

Chuck Harmon states that the sturdy 30 caliber ammo box will seal out moisture and is lockable. The company says that the seed vault kit is recommended by home gardening enthusiasts as well as master survivalists. "It gives you the power to produce your own food, and an endless supply of seeds for future plantings," Harmon explains.

The company's Facebook page, I Love Organic Gardens, has been abuzz with conversation regarding the seed vault for months as customers discuss how beneficial it has been in their overall survival plan. The kit contains 100 percent open pollinated heritage seeds that the company states will produce acres of food, and are easy to grow. The kit contains a free downloadable guide in PDF form to help customers better understand the planting and storage process to maximize investment value. Seeds include various types of beans, corn, and many other vegetables that can be reseeded and grown over and over again.

A survival seeds review is also available on the Amazon marketplace by consumers who purchased the kit when it was initially released. The company states that all customers who have ordered it are more than satisfied with the contents and the growing potential.

The kit is designed to provide survival potential in the event of catastrophe, and the company states that it is perfect for those who want to grow their own food and have the ability to grow food for many years into the future using the same kit.

Those interested can see the listing for the survival seed kit currently on the Amazon marketplace.
