

ProTributeBands Welcomes New Bad Company Tribute Band Six Gun Rebels

December 08, 2025

SAN RAMON, CA - December 08, 2025 -
Six Gun Rebels, a Pacific Northwest-based Bad Company tribute band, has inked a deal with Pro Tribute Bands for exposure to entertainment buyers online. The five-piece group, which formed in 2020, is using the winter months to refine its setlist, introduce rapid-fire song transitions, and develop new production elements ahead of a scheduled March debut.

The announcement follows a year in which Six Gun Rebels performed outside Washington state for the first time, extending their reach beyond the Pacific Northwest circuit. After testing new markets in 2025, the band plans to continue that trajectory in the coming year, booking dates across multiple states as they bring the music of the newly inducted Rock and Roll Hall of Fame band to audiences throughout the western United States.

Bad Company received its Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction on November 8, 2025, at a ceremony in Los Angeles. The British supergroup, which formed in 1973 and sold more than 40 million records worldwide, had been eligible for induction since 1999 but received its first nomination earlier this year. For Six Gun Rebels, the timing provides additional context for their tribute work, placing the original band's catalog in renewed cultural focus as classic rock fans revisit songs like "Can't Get Enough," "Feel Like Makin' Love," "Shooting Star," and "Rock 'n' Roll Fantasy."

The band is currently reworking its live show to include additional songs from the Bad Company catalog, along with tighter transitions between numbers. Nine video segments are integrated throughout the performance, providing visual elements that complement the audio presentation. According to the band, the goal is to deliver a show that balances faithful recreation with consistent pacing and visual engagement.

"We spent the back half of 2025 testing what works in front of different audiences and playing our first out-of-state dates," said Brent Woolard, founding member and drummer. "The holiday break gives us time to lock in those changes and come out in 2026 with a tighter, more complete show. With Bad Company now in the Rock Hall, there is renewed interest in this music, and we want to meet that moment with our best performance yet."

Six Gun Rebels features Jeff Martin on lead vocals, Brian Feldtman on guitar and keyboards, Eric Gibson on guitar and keyboards, Steve Moore on bass, and Woolard on drums. The lineup mirrors the five-piece format of Bad Company's original configuration, with dual-guitar arrangements and additional keyboard support to cover legendary intros, including the epic "Bad Company". Each member brings decades of performance experience to the stage, with backgrounds spanning original projects, touring acts, and studio work.

The band describes its live show as a retrospective journey through the Bad Company catalog, covering material from the group's peak years in the 1970s. Audiences can expect classic rock staples alongside deeper album cuts, presented with attention to the sonic character and stage energy of the original performances.

The band's first confirmed 2026 date is a headlining performance at the Roxy Theater in Bremerton, Washington, on March 21. Additional dates across the Pacific Northwest and other western states are expected to be announced in the coming weeks.
