Ross Moore Law Reveals Marietta Commuter Accidents 42 Percent Higher During Weekdays

December 08, 2025

ATLANTA, GA - December 08, 2025 -
Ross Moore Law, a personal injury firm serving the Marietta area, has released an analysis of local traffic accident data revealing that weekday crashes occur 42 percent more frequently than weekend collisions, with particularly dangerous periods during standard commute times.

The firm's examination of Georgia Department of Transportation crash data shows distinct patterns that affect daily commuters. Wednesdays and Fridays experience the highest crash rates throughout the week, while Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays show relative dips in accident frequency. The data identifies two critical danger periods: a minor peak between 7 and 8 a.m. during morning commutes, and a sustained high-risk window from 2 to 7 p.m. during afternoon and evening rush hours.

The afternoon period proves particularly hazardous as drivers navigate home after work. Factors contributing to increased accident risk during these hours include driver fatigue from the workday, rushing to reach destinations, and the dangerous tendency for regular commuters to operate on autopilot along familiar routes. This automatic driving mode can cause motorists to miss critical hazards that require immediate attention.

"Many of our clients are injured during their regular commute to or from work, and these accidents often result in significant disruptions to their employment and income," said Ross Moore, founder of the firm. "Drivers on familiar routes frequently experience a false sense of security that leads to decreased vigilance, especially during the afternoon hours when fatigue compounds the risk."

The psychological aspect of commute driving presents unique challenges. When drivers travel the same route daily, their attention can drift, leading to delayed reaction times when unexpected situations arise. Distracted driving behaviors, such as checking work emails at traffic lights or making phone calls while in slow-moving traffic, further elevate accident risks during commute hours.

For workers injured during their commute, legal considerations become complex. These accidents typically fall outside workers' compensation coverage, as traveling to and from work is generally not considered within the scope of employment. This distinction makes personal injury claims crucial for recovering damages, including medical expenses and lost wages resulting from injuries that prevent victims from working.

A Ross Moore car accident lawyer can help commuters understand their rights following a collision during work travel. The firm emphasizes that lost wage claims for commute-related accidents require careful documentation of how injuries directly impact employment and earning capacity.

Safety recommendations for daily commuters include departing earlier to avoid the pressure of rushing, occasionally varying routes to maintain alertness, and exercising heightened vigilance during the 2 to 7 p.m. window when accident rates peak. Drivers should also resist the temptation to multitask with work-related communications while behind the wheel.

Ross Moore Law provides legal representation for victims of auto accidents throughout the Marietta area and surrounding Georgia communities. The firm handles various collision types, including rear-end and head-on crashes, and assists clients with insurance disputes and compensation claims. As a car accident attorney practice focused on personal injury cases, the firm offers free consultations and operates with 24/7 availability for accident victims seeking legal guidance.
