Zombiedisasterkits.com, a company based in Vancouver, Washington, has released a new product that they state is the perfect spring birthday gift idea for men. Jillian Gregg, spokesperson for the company says, "Does your guy have a spring birthday that leaves you blank for ideas? Problem solved. Get him thinking about summer and BBQ season with an instant read digital cooking/BBQ thermometer he can use indoors also while he dreams of warm sunny days and burgers on the grill."

The QuickTemp thermometer, according to the company, provides exact food temperatures in five seconds and is accurate to one degree of actual temperature. It features an easy to read LCD display and will display temperature in either Fahrenheit or Celsius.

It also has a hold feature, and is created using the latest probe technology, and has a long battery life. "We've designed it to include a folding probe for safety," states Gregg, "And a number of other great features that will make it the perfect birthday gift for the man in your life."

The thermometer uses a single AA battery and has a negative 50 degrees to 300 degrees Fahrenheit measurement range. The included auto power off feature helps to prolong battery life.

ZombieDisasterKits.com produces a number of consumer products and novelty items. Gregg states that their quick temperature thermometer is great for men and women alike, but the company feels that men will really appreciate it for the upcoming cooking out season. She says that it is the perfect accompaniment to grills.

The thermometer can be seen on the company's official website or purchased through Amazon.com. Those interested can learn more about the features as well as pricing and shipping information at either site. On the official website for zombiedisasterkits.com, interested consumers will also find videos of the thermometer being used, to give them an idea of how to use it and the precise range of measurement that it offers.

The company states anyone with questions can contact them directly through their official website and learn more about other products that they currently have available as well.
