Diamond Haus Custom Jewelers Highlights Custom Necklace Designs Amid Holiday Season

December 05, 2025

COLD SPRING, KY - December 05, 2025 -
Diamond Haus Custom Jewelers has emphasized its capabilities in creating necklaces in Cold Springs, KY, as the holiday season advances. The family-operated business, founded in 1997, applies its extensive experience in jewelry craftsmanship to produce necklaces that serve as meaningful gifts. This focus responds to seasonal demand for unique items that carry sentimental value, allowing clients to commission pieces tailored to individual preferences.

The company began as Fort Thomas Jewelers, concentrating on jewelry repairs and manufacturing for wholesale clients across local and national markets. Over the subsequent decades, it expanded to incorporate retail services, with a growing emphasis on custom designs. This progression enabled direct engagement with customers seeking distinctive jewelry. The involvement of family members has been integral to this development, ensuring continuity in expertise.

Daughters Bilinda and Taylor contribute to operations alongside their parents. Bilinda oversees the retail storefront, interacts with customers, and manages marketing initiatives. Taylor, holding certification as a gemologist from the Gemological Institute of America, focuses on custom CAD designs drawn by hand and backend production processes. The team's combined experience surpasses 100 years in the jewelry sector, supporting the creation of necklaces that blend traditional techniques with modern elements.

The custom design process for necklaces mirrors the company's structured approach to jewelry creation. It commences with consultations to understand the client's concepts and requirements. Designers then generate CAD renderings to depict the envisioned necklace. After client approval, a wax model is crafted, followed by casting in the selected metal. Gemstones are incorporated, textures added if desired, and the piece receives final polishing. This entirely in-house procedure maintains quality oversight and accommodates various financial considerations.

Necklaces at Diamond Haus Custom Jewelers can feature diverse styles, such as pendants with personal engravings or chains integrated with heirloom elements. The company's background in wholesale informs equitable pricing, derived from market insights. Clients often request necklaces for occasions like holidays, anniversaries, or milestones, with the team guiding selections of metals, stones, and designs.

Client accounts reflect the process's effectiveness. One individual recounted collaborating on a necklace design that incorporated a family gem, resulting in a piece that honored heritage. Another described the team's assistance in creating a necklace within specified parameters, noting the reduction in decision-making complexity. These interactions, spanning years, involve staff members like Vince, Bilinda, and Taylor, who provide input on material choices and aesthetic options.

Beyond custom designs, the company performs repairs on necklaces and other jewelry, including items deemed difficult by other establishments. This service extends to restoring vintage necklaces or adjusting modern pieces. A three-day event in July 2025, conducted with National Rarities, enabled community members to appraise and sell items such as gold, silver, coins, diamonds, and designer jewelry. Although not exclusively focused on necklaces, the event underscored the company's community involvement.

As the jewelry store in Cold Spring, KY, Diamond Haus Custom Jewelers caters to the Northern Kentucky area and adjacent regions. The site accommodates both spontaneous visits and prearranged meetings, aiding those interested in necklace customization during peak seasons. December typically witnesses increased activity in personalized jewelry, with necklaces emerging as popular choices for gifting.

Vincent Keairns, co-owner, observed the seasonal patterns: "Necklaces offer a way for clients to express personal connections during the holidays, drawing on our family's craftsmanship to realize their ideas."

Renne Keairns, co-owner, supplemented: "The evolution of our business has allowed us to specialize in pieces like necklaces that hold enduring meaning, supported by the expertise passed through generations."

The transition from wholesale to retail has diversified the company's portfolio while preserving foundational skills in fabrication. Necklaces constitute a significant segment, merging age-old forging methods with current design software. These techniques, originating from historical practices, enhance the longevity and visual quality of the jewelry.

Relationships with clients frequently extend across generations, with families revisiting for further services. This loyalty indicates confidence in the team's abilities. The commitment to understanding and practical principles guides each undertaking, from conception to finalization.

Diamond Haus Custom Jewelers addresses additional jewelry requirements, including designs for other occasions. The fusion of digital tools with manual artistry permits accurate executions of client visions. For necklaces, this encompasses variations from simple chains to elaborate multi-stone arrangements, all adapted to specifications.

Certifications among staff, such as Taylor's gemology credentials, facilitate informed choices in stone selection for necklaces. This proficiency ensures that elements like diamonds or colored gems adhere to standards of cut, clarity, color, and carat.

Toward year's end, the company persists in responding to client needs, solidifying its community presence. The dedication to internal production reduces dependence on outside sources, fostering efficiency in customization.

Diamond Haus Custom Jewelers functions as a family-owned entity dedicated to custom jewelry creation, repairs, and bridal offerings. Situated in Cold Spring, KY, it assists clients throughout the Tristate region with a foundation in skilled workmanship and reliability.
