Jewelers Trade Shop Highlights Watches During 2025 Holiday Gifting Season

December 05, 2025

PENSACOLA, FL - December 05, 2025 -
Jewelers Trade Shop has drawn attention to its watch inventory amid the 2025 holiday period, which aligns with observed increases in consumer interest for luxury timepieces. Industry data shows that search interest in luxury watches has risen significantly this season, with terms related to Swiss brands experiencing notable growth. This trend corresponds with the company's longstanding provision of timepieces since its establishment in 1956, as it approaches its 70th anniversary in 2026.

The holiday months mark a peak for watch-related activities, with December identified as a key time for such interests according to market analyses. Jewelers Trade Shop maintains a selection of watches, including models from Rolex, such as the Datejust. These offerings include certified pre-owned options, which provide access to verified pieces within the luxury segment.

In addition to watches, the company handles custom jewelry designs, allowing for the creation of personalized items. Repair services cover a range of needs, from routine maintenance to more involved restorations, applicable to timepieces and other jewelry. These services have formed part of the operations for decades, supporting the Pensacola community.

The business shares content related to the Rolex SailGP Championship, an international sailing event where Rolex serves as the title partner and official timepiece. Recent seasons have featured developments such as expanded participation, which the company highlights through its platforms to inform about brand associations.

As the 2025 holiday season progresses, watches remain central to gifting patterns, with stable prices and increasing sales noted in the luxury watch market. Jewelers Trade Shop's inventory reflects this, incorporating timeless designs alongside contemporary options. The bridal collections from Gabriel Co. complement the watches, offering engagement and wedding jewelry for those marking milestones.

Corbett Davis III, Owner of Jewelers Trade Shop, commented on the seasonal focus. "Watches continue to hold significance during the holidays, drawing from our history of providing such items to the community," said Davis.

Further insights indicate that the fall and winter periods shape consumer demand in jewelry and watches, with trends toward personalization and repairs. The company accommodates these through its custom design process, where clients collaborate on unique pieces, including modifications to watches or integration with other jewelry.

Approaching the 70th anniversary, Jewelers Trade Shop reviews its trajectory from its 1956 founding to current operations. The inclusion of Rolex-certified pre-owned watches has expanded the range, allowing for varied entry points into the category. Blog entries on the website discuss topics like Rolex's involvement in yachting, providing context on the brand's broader activities.

Davis added perspective on the company's role. "As we observe holiday trends in watches, our commitment to repair and design services supports ongoing customer needs," said Davis.

Social media from the business includes updates on products, encouraging engagement with the inventory. These efforts connect with local residents, sharing details on available selections during the season.

Since its inception, Jewelers Trade Shop has incorporated branded timepieces while upholding expertise in custom work and repairs. This balance has sustained its position over the years, adapting to market shifts without altering core principles.

The Gabriel Co. bridal line provides options for rings and bands, often considered alongside watches for coordinated purchases. Customization extends across categories, enabling adjustments like engravings or material changes.

Content on the SailGP Championship details Rolex's global sponsorship, involving high-speed races in various locations. This information underscores the precision associated with the watches carried by the company.
