Markhoff & Mittman, PC Announces Workers Comp Lawyer Resource Update

December 06, 2025

City of White Plains, New York - December 06, 2025 -
Markhoff & Mittman, PC has announced the release of updated informational resources for its workers? compensation practice effective December 2025, offering expanded legal guidance relevant to ongoing claims in White Plains, NY. The update reflects current procedural developments in the workers? compensation system and supports the firm?s continued efforts to provide clear, accessible explanations of statutory and administrative requirements for injured workers. Brian M. Mittman, managing attorney at Markhoff & Mittman, PC, stated that the update ?strengthens the firm?s ability to present accurate and timely information that helps individuals understand the steps involved in workers? compensation matters,? noting that the revisions align with recent statewide changes in claim processing.

The updated materials outline procedural timelines, filing requirements, and key administrative considerations established by the New York State Workers? Compensation Board. Markhoff & Mittman, PC, established in 1933, has served claimants across multiple regions in New York for decades, and the firm periodically revises its public-facing resources to ensure compliance with current regulations. The new guidance includes explanations of wage-replacement rules, medical documentation expectations, and administrative hearing procedures, presented in a format designed to support clarity without offering case-specific advice. This release marks the first comprehensive update since regulatory adjustments earlier in the year, which introduced modifications to certain reporting practices and evidentiary submissions.

The firm?s workers? compensation team handles matters involving workplace injuries across a wide range of industries, including construction, transportation, healthcare, and municipal employment. Case evaluations within the practice focus on statutory definitions of injury, insurance carrier responsibilities, and the evidentiary record necessary for administrative determinations. Attorneys at the firm routinely examine employer records, medical reports, and Board filings to prepare for hearings and appeals. These operational details have informed the development of the updated resources, which summarize procedural checkpoints that commonly influence case outcomes.

Markhoff & Mittman, PC maintains offices in several New York regions, allowing its legal team to monitor variations in local administrative trends and hearing schedules. Internal review processes are conducted regularly to align the firm?s reference materials with observed changes in Board operations. The firm also tracks public data issued by regulatory agencies to ensure that its summaries reflect active guidelines rather than outdated interpretations. This approach supports the firm?s objective of providing accurate information about the workers? compensation system without promoting any specific legal service or outcome.

The resource update also highlights general considerations for individuals navigating claim documentation, such as the significance of timely reporting and the role of authorized medical providers in the workers? compensation framework. These explanations reference statutory requirements and administrative regulations rather than offering assessments of potential case results. Attorneys contribute subject?predicate?object analyses of relevant legal standards to help illustrate how evidence is reviewed within a typical claim. The materials further discuss how wage calculations and treatment authorizations are evaluated by the Board during standard claim processing.

Markhoff & Mittman, PC continues to document developments in workers? compensation law as part of its long-standing practice focus. The firm?s attorneys follow legislative announcements, administrative commentary, and Board rule updates to track emerging issues that may influence future claims. These observations help shape revisions to publicly available summaries intended to support general understanding of the workers? compensation process. Additional updates to the firm?s guidance are expected if further procedural adjustments occur at the state level.
