Charles Sampson Group of Charter One Realty Advises Buyers on What?s Different About Living in Hilton Head Lately

December 09, 2025

HILTON HEAD, SC - December 09, 2025 -
Hilton Head Island is undergoing significant real estate changes that reflect evolving lifestyle preferences, according to insights from the Charles Sampson Group of Charter One Realty. Based on client activity and inquiries, the firm reports increased interest in coastal primary residences, driven by buyers seeking a blend of modern living and preservation of natural and cultural heritage.

Charles Sampson, with nearly four decades of experience in Hilton Head?s real estate market, highlights a shift toward residents wanting more than seasonal retreats. ?We are witnessing a demographic change where year-round residents prioritize community, sustainability, and a connection to the island?s legacy,? Sampson notes.

?What?s unique about living in Hilton Head lately is how the island has evolved into a space where lifestyle and legacy meet,? said Charles Sampson of Charter One Realty. ?People come here for the stunning coastline, the golf courses, and the scenery, but what keeps them here is the sense of belonging and stewardship that the Hilton Head community maintains,? the local real estate agent adds.

The Charles Sampson Group of Charter One Realty has seen an increase in demand for primary residences from buyers across the Southeast and beyond. Many are drawn to ongoing infrastructure investments, a vibrant arts and entertainment scene?including the Arts Center of Coastal Carolina and the Hilton Head Symphony Orchestra?and the island?s longstanding commitment to coastal conservation, Sampson said.

Charles Sampson of Charter One Realty says Hilton Head?s reputation as a community grows stronger due to thoughtful town planning and investments in quality-of-life enhancements. He notes that more residents can now enjoy year-round outdoor living while still having easy access to adjacent coastal cities and urban work centers.

The firm also notes that more buyers emphasize sustainability. Buyers now prefer neighborhoods with walkable design, conservation-minded landscaping, and proximity to local businesses. Popular residential areas in Hilton Head offer a balance of privacy and community that many homeowners value. Waterfront homes, golf villas, and inland cottages remain popular choices among buyers, the firm notes.

?Hilton Head is modernizing without compromising its historic areas, retaining its Lowcountry charm,? added Sampson. ?Residents appreciate that the town values ecological responsibility while also keeping its identity.?

According to Charles Sampson?s market review, real estate inventory remains competitive and varies by community and price point. The island, once busiest during peak tourist months, now sees steady real estate activity year-round, with a resident population of over 37,000 and broader regional growth centered in Beaufort County.

Meanwhile, Charles Sampson Group of Charter One Realty assists newcomers and long-term homeowners through Hilton Head's diverse property market. The real estate company's decades of community service reflect Hilton Head's enduring appeal: a blend of progress and sustainability that distinguishes it among the nation?s coastal communities.
