Horst Shewmaker, LLC Comments on Georgia's Fatal Car Accident Decline While Alpharetta Corridors Remain High-Risk

January 09, 2026

ALPHARETTA, GA - January 09, 2026 -
Horst Shewmaker, LLC, a prominent personal injury law firm based in Alpharetta, Georgia, is addressing the complex reality behind Georgia's recent 4% decrease in fatal car accidents through 2023, noting that certain Alpharetta corridors continue to pose significant dangers to motorists despite statewide improvements.

While Georgia has achieved a modest reduction in traffic fatalities, the Atlanta metro area continues to report over 28,000 accidents annually, with specific areas in Alpharetta maintaining their status as high-risk zones for serious collisions. The GA-400 corridor and Old Milton Parkway remain particularly concerning for local safety advocates and legal professionals who witness the aftermath of these incidents regularly.

"The statewide statistics show encouraging progress, but our experience representing clients injured on GA-400 and Old Milton Parkway tells a different story for Alpharetta drivers," said Zachary S. Shewmaker, Partner at Horst Shewmaker, LLC. "These corridors combine high-speed traffic, complex interchanges, and heavy commuter volume that create perfect conditions for serious accidents. We've secured seven-figure settlements for clients injured in these exact locations, which underscores just how severe these collisions

The disparity between statewide improvements and local danger zones highlights the importance of understanding regional traffic patterns and risk factors. Horst Shewmaker car accident lawyers have observed that while overall safety measures and enforcement efforts have contributed to the state's 4% decline in fatal accidents, certain infrastructure challenges and traffic patterns in North Fulton County create persistent hazards that statistics alone cannot capture.

The firm's extensive experience handling cases along these dangerous corridors has revealed common factors contributing to serious accidents, including rapid lane changes near exit ramps, distracted driving during heavy commute hours, and speed differentials between merging and through traffic. These observations come from years of investigating accident scenes, reviewing police reports, and representing victims who have suffered life-altering injuries in these locations.

Car accident lawyers across the region have noted that the concentration of accidents in specific areas like the GA-400 corridor suggests that targeted safety improvements and increased awareness campaigns may be necessary to address localized risk factors that persist despite broader statewide progress.

"When we see the same dangerous patterns repeating in specific locations year after year, it becomes clear that general safety improvements aren't reaching every corner of our community equally," added Shewmaker. "Drivers in Alpharetta need to remain especially vigilant on these corridors, and those who are injured deserve immediate legal representation to protect their rights and secure fair compensation."
