March 16, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Carson City, Nevada based company, Home and Garden America, has recently launched a survival vault that the company states includes everything needed to grow fresh food during a disaster. The company states that the best survival gear will always include a survival seed vault.

Chuck Harmon, spokesperson for the company states, "Our survival seeds vault is the ultimate in survival preparation. It contains everything you need to keep fresh food on the table for years down the road."

The survival seeds vault from Home and Garden America includes a 30 caliber ammo box that seals completely to lock out moisture. Also included are seeds for a number of fresh fruits and vegetables, and the company states that the seeds provide an endless supply of food because they can be reseeded for future use.

"We thought about the future when designing our survival seed vault kit," adds Harmon. "Instead of just planting once, you can reseed these foods and have newly grown fresh fruits and vegetables for a long, long time."

Chuck Harmon points out that everyone preparing for survival needs a seed vault, and one that is specifically designed to protect the seeds from damage before they are used. The seed vault from Home and Garden America, which can be seen at <http://www.amazon.com/review/R3M0V6ZQH4WQE1>, contains 100 percent open pollinated heritage seeds that the company says can be used to produce acres of fresh food, along with a guide for growing and storing the seeds.

In a review from the Amazon marketplace, Amazon customer aBoss states that the majority of his seeds have "germinated and produced exceptionally well in our square foot gardens in Southeast Michigan."

The company states that the seeds have an 85 percent germination rate, and many customers who have purchased the seed vault agree. One reviewer states that he is amazed at how well the seeds have done, and that he has grown a number of different varieties of tomatoes, which are included in the set along with melons, eggplant, corn, and various other foods.

Those interested in learning more about the seed vault can visit the company on their official website.
