Carson City, NV business Home and Garden America has recently released their heirloom survival seed bank product. This seed bank contains almost 20,000 different seeds, from 105 varieties of seeding plants, all non-GMO. The company has indicated that they are committed to making sure people are able to save the planet in case of a long lasting disaster, and they therefore now encourage everyone to consider the heirloom survival seeds as a present for a friend or loved one.

Home and Garden America's Chuck Harmon says: "What greater present is there to give someone you care for but the survival of our planet? We know from various moments in time that we literally owe our survival to those who were clever enough to create seed banks. This isn't just because seeds grow plants that grow crops, but also because the earth depends on its flora. Our heirloom survival seed bank, therefore, is the ideal present for anyone."

Those who have purchased the seed bank so far have been very happy with it. They often mention that they have had 100% germination on their plants and that the storage box itself is very sturdy. This is important in terms of survival, as most seeds cannot be planted straight after a disaster. Rather, the earth has to settle for a while until it is once again ready to grow crops. People have also mentioned that the seeds can be grown in a variety of climates, which is an important detail as it means they are not bound by geography.

The company is pleased to see that many people are already considering the product as a great present for a friend or spouse. One customer mentioned that she had purchased the seeds as a present for her husband, and that he was very happy with it. Other people have mentioned similar things, with everyone indicating that the gift recipient was very pleased.

For Home and Garden America, the goal is to make sure people are able to enhance their chances of surviving, but also the survival of the planet as a whole. A disaster may never happen but, if it does, at least some people will be prepared.
