Home and Garden America is currently promoting their emergency heirloom seed bank. In line with this, they have released a YouTube video to discuss the features and benefits of this product. Since having released the emergency seeds, they have received a wealth of positive reviews from people who have purchased it either for themselves or their loved ones.

"Throughout history, we have seen that the quick thinking of a small group of people has ensured our collective survival," says Chuck Harmon of Home and Garden America. "Consider, for instance, the seed banks that were started in Russia during times of war and extreme cold. If it wasn't for them, Russia would have been turned into an arid, inhabitable part of our world, which would have had tremendous consequences for the rest of the planet as well."

The eco system of the Earth is incredibly fragile and highly affected by any disaster, whether natural or man-made. Seed banks are designed to ensure that, if something catastrophic does happen, people have the opportunity to rebuild the things that really matter: nature itself and food for survival. The seeds included are highlighted in the survival seeds vault video. This also explains that they all come from seeding plants, meaning that a new crop can be grown as soon as one crop has been harvested.

Those who have tried the product have been very happy with the results. A lot of customers are involved in "prepping", which means they stockpile items that could be of benefit during an emergency. These include such things as bottled water, canned foods, blankets, torches, phone charges, batteries and more. Their goal is to make sure that, should a real emergency happen, they can keep their family safe, warm and fed for as long as possible. Because the seeds offered by Home and Garden America are also GMO and pesticide free, this has made them even more attractive to preppers, who are often strongly involved in conservation efforts as well.

People are encouraged to follow the heirloomseedsinfo YouTube channel so that they can be kept up to date with new developments.
