Home and Garden America, a consumer product company based in Carson City, Nevada, has partnered with the Amazon marketplace in an effort to help customers survive the coming disasters. CEO of Home and Garden America, Chuck Harmon, recently stated, "We designed our survival seed pack to cover food needs for families during times of disaster, and are happy to announce that our seed vault is available on Amazon.com."

The company has provided a number of informative articles and other resources to help prepare people for emergency survival. Not only do they offer a survival seed pack, but they also provide a free PDF download that includes vital information related to the planting and storing of seeds for future use.

Harmon states that in order for the seed vault to be ultimately helpful, individuals have to be able to utilize it to its fullest potential. Thus, the company has provided information that is designed to help consumers to store their seeds safely for future use. Harmon explains, "You just don't know what's going to happen. With the world as it is now, anything could happen at any time and you need to be able to feed yourself, to feed your family, if and when disaster hits."

He says that the survival seeds are packaged in a water resistant ammo box for easy and efficient storage, and that the downloadable PDF gives pertinent information related to storing future seeds. The seeds are all designed to provide food for the short term and to provide additional seeds for future use.

A wide variety of seeds are included, enough to plant acres of food, according to the company. Harmon states that the survival vegetable seeds include something that everyone is sure to eat, so each member of the family can have fresh fruits and vegetables years into the future.

The company states that by working with the Amazon marketplace, they can reach more consumers with their seed vault and information, and that they hope to be able to help consumers to fully prepare for disaster before it strikes.

More about the company can be seen on their official website.
