December 18, 2025

COLUMBIA CITY, IN - December 18, 2025 -
Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc. has added Columbia City, Indiana to its current HVAC service coverage area. The expansion represents a geographic update to the company?s operational footprint in northeastern Indiana.

The inclusion of Columbia City marks the latest in a series of area-specific updates the company has made as part of its evolving service planning. While Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc. has historically served a range of communities across the region, the addition of Columbia City formalizes the town as an active location for HVAC scheduling.

David Gareiss, speaking on behalf of Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc., confirmed that the company has finalized preparations to serve residential and light commercial HVAC needs in Columbia City. ?This service area addition follows our ongoing evaluations of logistics, staffing, and access,? he said. ?Columbia City has been on our radar, and we?ve aligned our scheduling accordingly.?

The company adjusts geographic availability based on internal logistics and seasonal considerations.

Columbia City?s addition to the service map reflects both route planning efficiency and capacity readiness. While the specific day-to-day volume of service calls is not disclosed, the new coverage area has been added to the company?s routine scheduling options.

Such service expansions are part of the broader operational approach for Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc., which maintains flexibility in how it deploys teams across northeastern Indiana. The HVAC contractor regularly evaluates its coverage zones to accommodate regional developments and changes in infrastructure planning.

The decision to begin service in Columbia City follows a standard internal review process. Gareiss noted that no specific event or campaign prompted the change, but rather a steady evaluation of service area opportunities. ?There are multiple factors we review when expanding our coverage. It?s a balance of planning and timing, and Columbia City aligned well with both,? he said.

Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc. has not announced any new service offerings in conjunction with the area addition. The existing scope of HVAC services remains consistent with what the company provides in other areas.

Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc. regularly assesses where its services are most effectively scheduled, taking into account operational logistics and other planning considerations. Rather than maintaining fixed boundaries, the company adjusts its coverage areas as needed to align with internal scheduling reviews and broader service coordination efforts.

Columbia City joins a list of communities where the company?s HVAC services are now available. While no additional details have been provided about future area expansions, the company has indicated that ongoing evaluations will continue as part of routine planning. Future changes, if any, would follow the same internal review structure.

Gareiss reiterated that the Columbia City addition represents a routine update to the company?s operations. ?It?s not tied to a promotional event or marketing effort. It?s simply a change in where our teams are available to be scheduled,? he said.

There are no accompanying infrastructure changes, staffing announcements, or modifications to the company?s business model associated with the Columbia City coverage update. Flow-Tech Plumbing & Heating Inc. continues to operate under the same leadership and service protocols as before.

Updates to service boundaries like this are a common part of managing operations across multiple communities. While the Columbia City expansion reflects routine planning, it also underscores how service providers adapt their scheduling and logistics over time. Such adjustments are typical for companies seeking to maintain steady coverage in a shifting regional landscape.
