

Amircani Law Addresses Rising Atlanta Car Accident Rates Amid Population Growth

December 22, 2025

ATLANTA, GA - December 22, 2025 -
Amircani Law has issued observations on Atlanta's escalating traffic safety challenges as new data reveals the metropolitan area experienced approximately 28,000 to 30,000 crashes annually in recent years, while population growth continues straining existing road infrastructure. The Atlanta-based personal injury firm notes the correlation between the region's rapid expansion and increasing accident rates affecting drivers throughout Fulton and DeKalb counties.

The Atlanta Regional Commission reports the 11-county metro area added 64,400 residents between April 2024 and April 2025, continuing a pattern that has pushed the region's population beyond 5.2 million. Traffic safety data indicates DeKalb County experienced its worst year for fatalities in a decade during 2023, with deaths increasing 25 percent compared to the previous year despite fewer overall crashes. Atlanta Police Department records documented 28,278 crashes within city limits in 2023, maintaining consistently high accident volumes that place significant demands on legal resources and emergency services.

"The intersection of rapid population growth and aging infrastructure creates unique challenges for Atlanta drivers," said Maha Amircani, founding attorney at Amircani Law. "We're seeing more complex accident patterns emerge as traffic density increases, particularly during peak commute hours when our roadways operate beyond intended capacity. These conditions require heightened awareness from all road users and comprehensive legal support when accidents occur."

The firm has represented injury clients in Atlanta since 2013, handling car accidents, motorcycle collision cases, truck accident litigation, and pedestrian injury matters. The attorneys work with clients navigating medical treatment, insurance negotiations, and compensation recovery following traffic incidents. Over twelve years of practice, the personal injury team has recovered more than $25,000,000 for clients affected by various accident types across the Atlanta metropolitan area.

Recent infrastructure assessments highlight particular concern areas including interstate interchanges, arterial roads experiencing commercial development, and residential zones where traffic calming measures have not kept pace with increased vehicle volumes. The Georgia Department of Transportation has identified multiple high-incident corridors requiring safety improvements, though funding and implementation timelines remain uncertain.

"Understanding the broader context of Atlanta's traffic safety landscape helps inform our approach to each case," noted Amircani. "Every accident occurs within this larger framework of systemic challenges, from inadequate road design to insufficient enforcement resources. Our role extends beyond individual representation to advocating for meaningful safety improvements that benefit all Atlanta residents."

Amircani Law specializes in personal injury and auto accident cases throughout the Atlanta metropolitan area. The firm provides legal representation for victims of car, motorcycle, truck, bus, and rideshare accidents, as well as personal injury cases including slip and fall incidents, spinal injuries, traumatic brain injuries, and wrongful death claims. Founded in 2013, the practice maintains offices in Atlanta and serves clients throughout Georgia.
