Court King Injury Law Announces Expanded Auto Collision Representation Across Additional Service Areas

December 24, 2025

December 24, 2025 -

Court King Injury Law today announced the availability of dedicated auto collision representation as an ongoing service, with coverage now extended to residents of Henderson, Summerlin, and broader Clark County. The announcement reflects the firm?s continued focus on assisting injured motorists, passengers, pedestrians, and riders following roadway crashes involving cars, rideshare vehicles, trucks, buses, and motorcycles. The service centers on investigation, evidence development, insurance negotiations, and litigation when warranted, and is designed to guide injured parties from the initial claim through potential trial.

The firm confirmed that the offering addresses a wide range of traffic crash scenarios, including rear impact incidents, left turn conflicts, sideswipe events, T-bone impacts at intersections, rollover events, and cases involving inattentive driving or flight from the scene. The practice also encompasses collisions with larger commercial vehicles and public transit, reflecting the complex liability and evidence standards that arise when professional drivers, fleet operators, or public carriers are involved. The scope accounts for injuries that may occur not only inside a vehicle but also at curbs, crosswalks, loading zones, parking facilities, and other locations where motorists and pedestrians intersect.

Court King Injury Law stated that the service relies on standard civil procedures used in negligence claims, including early preservation of records, inspection of vehicles and crash locations, collection of medical documentation, and timely notice to involved insurers. Where helpful, matters proceed to structured settlement talks, mediation, or a civil jury trial. The firm noted that not every case follows the same path, as outcomes depend on liability, available coverage, documentation, and damages. The framework is intended to deliver a clear process for claimants while maintaining flexibility for fact patterns that involve commercial policies, multiple defendants, or disputed causation.

The practice will be led by founder and managing attorney Jordan J. Butler, whose work has included nearly two decades in high-stakes litigation and licensure in both Nevada and Utah. The firm emphasized Jordan J. Butler?s recognition from regional publications and peer-review organizations and pointed to his background as a former Division I athlete as a source of preparation, discipline, and competitive focus in courtroom settings. Language access in Spanish will continue to be available for clients who prefer it, according to the firm.

?Auto collision cases are built on proof,? said Jordan J. Butler, managing attorney at Court King Injury Law. ?From the first call, the focus is on gathering facts, preserving evidence, and presenting a complete picture of liability and damages. The expansion of this service ensures that more residents across the valley have access to experienced legal representation that treats every file like it may be tried.?

According to the firm, the expanded coverage includes assistance for individuals harmed in crashes involving third-party negligence across city streets, arterial corridors, and regional highways in and around the Las Vegas Valley. In matters where heavy vehicles are involved, the team addresses records unique to commercial carriers and contractors, including maintenance logs, driver qualifications, telematics, and dispatch records. Where a public entity is implicated, claims and filing deadlines are handled in accordance with applicable statutes and notice requirements.

The service identifies several common categories of compensable loss that may be pursued under state law, subject to evidentiary support and case facts. These include medical treatment costs, therapy and rehabilitation, wage loss, and pain and suffering. The firm indicated that each claim proceeds only after confirming that the elements of negligence can be established and that the claimed damages are supported by medical records and other documentation. Where appropriate, expert testimony may be sought on issues such as accident reconstruction, biomechanics, vocational impact, and life care planning in higher-severity injury cases.

Court King Injury Law highlighted that the expansion also integrates claims arising from incidents that do not involve a two-vehicle crash but nonetheless occur in traffic or transportation settings. Examples include collisions with pedestrians or cyclists in marked and unmarked crossings, roadway incidents connected to unsafe premises conditions such as poorly maintained lots or approaches, and cases with overlapping liability between drivers, property operators, and third-party contractors. The firm noted that these scenarios often require parallel evidence tracks to document site conditions, maintenance practices, and foreseeable hazards.

The service rollout aligns with the firm?s broader personal injury practice, which encompasses catastrophic harm, traumatic brain injury, premises incidents, and wrongful death claims. The firm stated that the announcement should be understood as a notice of availability rather than a promise of any particular outcome, and that each matter will be evaluated on its own facts, including the circumstances of the event, the severity of injury, and the presence of insurance coverage. Timelines can vary, the firm said, with some matters resolving in claims practice and others requiring formal litigation or trial.

Court King Injury Law reiterated that the expansion aims to meet demand across multiple communities in Southern Nevada. Residents in Henderson, Summerlin, and throughout Clark County may now access the same intake, case evaluation, and litigation resources historically available near the firm?s base of operations in Las Vegas. The firm described the initiative as an operational step designed to increase accessibility rather than a marketing campaign, with an emphasis on consistent procedures and responsive communication from first contact through resolution.

?Building a strong record early is essential,? Jordan Butler added. ?The goal is to position the case for a fair result by identifying all responsible parties, confirming coverage, and preparing as if a jury will review the evidence. That preparation drives informed negotiations and, when necessary, a clear presentation in court.?
