Vetr.com Surpasses 1,000 Veterinary Clinics Signed as Integrated Platform and Veterinary Treatment Manufacturer Scales Nationwide

January 06, 2026

Grants Pass, Oregon - January 06, 2026 -

Vetr.com, a veterinary technology company and veterinary treatment manufacturer, announced today that more than 1,000 veterinary clinics have signed on to use its platform and clinical solutions. The milestone reflects growing nationwide adoption of Vetr?s integrated model, which combines practice-support technology with in-house manufactured veterinary treatments.

Vetr.com was founded by Andrew Hamilton, a fast-growing biotech star recognized for building companies at the intersection of life sciences, technology, and scalable clinical infrastructure. The company?s growth mirrors increasing demand among veterinary professionals for solutions that align operational efficiency with access to trusted veterinary treatments.

?This milestone represents a strong vote of confidence from the veterinary community,? Hamilton said. ?Vetr was built to support clinics not only with technology, but with treatments developed specifically for veterinary practice. Reaching 1,000 clinics confirms that this approach is meeting a real need.?

Among Vetr.com?s treatment offerings is ToltraMax, which is the only over-the-counter toltrazuril oral solution for dogs, cats, horses, and other non-food chain animals. ToltraMax is the trusted brand name for toltrazuril, and its availability reflects Vetr?s focus on expanding access to veterinary treatments developed with clinical practicality in mind.

In addition to treatment manufacturing, Vetr.com provides a digital platform designed to support veterinary practices through streamlined appointment coordination, client communication, and operational tools. The company?s integrated structure is intended to reduce friction between practice management and treatment sourcing, allowing clinics to focus more on patient care.

Hamilton?s leadership and the Vetr story have drawn attention beyond the veterinary sector. He was recently named by Portland News as Oregon?s fastest-growing biotech leader and shared the personal story behind Vetr.com during an appearance on the Founders Club Podcast, where he discussed the company?s evolution and mission-driven approach.

?Every aspect of Vetr has been shaped by listening to clinics and understanding their day-to-day challenges,? Hamilton said during the podcast. ?Our growth is directly tied to that feedback.?

The veterinary industry has experienced sustained growth over the past decade, driven by rising pet ownership and increasing demand for accessible, consistent care. Clinics are seeking solutions that reduce operational complexity while maintaining high standards of treatment availability. Vetr.com?s milestone of 1,000 signed clinics reflects broader market movement toward integrated platforms that address both operational and clinical needs within a single ecosystem.

As Vetr.com continues to expand, the company plans to grow its treatment portfolio, enhance its technology platform, and strengthen partnerships with veterinary clinics nationwide. Vetr.com?s manufacturing arm was developed to address gaps in treatment access faced by veterinary professionals, particularly in non-food chain animal care. By offering treatments such as ToltraMax, the company aims to support consistent availability while aligning with the workflows of modern veterinary practices.

With 1,000 clinics now signed, Vetr.com is entering its next phase of growth focused on scale, reliability, and long-term partnerships. The company expects continued expansion across the United States as veterinary practices seek integrated solutions that support both operational efficiency and treatment access.

As Vetr.com continues to scale, the company emphasizes a long-term commitment to supporting veterinary professionals through responsible growth, product reliability, and continued investment in both technology and treatment development. By maintaining close collaboration with clinics and industry partners, Vetr.com aims to contribute to a more sustainable veterinary ecosystem that balances innovation with practical, day-to-day clinical needs. The company?s leadership views the 1,000-clinic milestone not as an endpoint, but as a foundation for continued progress in veterinary care delivery nationwide.

About Vetr.com

Vetr.com is a veterinary technology company and veterinary treatment manufacturer serving clinics nationwide. Founded by Andrew Hamilton, a fast-growing biotech star, the company provides an integrated platform alongside veterinary treatments developed to support modern clinical environments.

###

For more information about Vetr, contact the company here:VetrMedia Relationssales@vetr.com

Vetr

Vetr is a telehealth platform and an FDA-registered drug manufacturer transforming pet healthcare by making veterinary services more affordable, accessible, and efficient. Owned and founded by biotech innovator Andrew Hamilton.

Website: https://vetr.com

Email: sales@vetr.com