Mountaintop Web Design Launches New Website for Parker Integrative Health

January 10, 2026

GREENWOOD VILLAGE, CO - January 10, 2026 -
Mountaintop Web Design announced the launch of a newly redesigned website for Parker Integrative Health, completing a recent digital project focused on improving clarity, accessibility, and online appointment engagement for the multidisciplinary wellness clinic. The website is now live and reflects a collaborative effort between the agency and the clinic to update Parker Integrative Health?s online presence.

The website launch was undertaken to support Parker Integrative Health?s ongoing operations by providing patients with a clearer view of the clinic?s services, care philosophy, and scheduling process. Mountaintop Web Design led the strategy, design, and development of the site, working with clinic representatives to ensure the platform accurately represents how Parker Integrative Health communicates with patients and manages day-to-day interactions.

?This project was about building a website that functions as a practical extension of the clinic,? said Josiah Bussing, CEO of Mountaintop Web Design. ?Our focus was on presenting information in a way that is straightforward, respectful of the patient experience, and easy for the Parker Integrative Health team to manage over time.?

The redesigned website organizes information around the clinic?s integrative and functional care services, appointment options, and approach to patient care. Content was structured to help visitors understand what the clinic offers and how to begin the scheduling process, with particular attention paid to navigation and readability for first-time visitors. According to Mountaintop Web Design, the site architecture was developed to minimize friction and reduce confusion during key decision points.

Parker Integrative Health participated closely throughout the redesign process, providing input on messaging, structure, and priorities for the new platform. Jennifer Dutilly, the Clinic Director for Parker Integrative Health, said the collaboration was central to the outcome. ?We?re so grateful to Mountaintop for rebuilding our site with care and creativity,? Dutilly said. ?Their team worked alongside us every step of the way, making the process seamless and collaborative. The result truly reflects who we are.?

As part of the engagement, Mountaintop Web Design evaluated the clinic?s previous website to identify gaps in content organization and usability. The new site places greater emphasis on clear service descriptions, intuitive navigation, and consistent presentation across desktop and mobile devices. Appointment booking tools were also refined to support patients seeking consultations or ongoing care.

The project also included technical updates intended to support long-term maintainability. Mountaintop Web Design implemented a content management framework that allows Parker Integrative Health to update service information, hours, and operational details internally as needs change. The agency noted that flexibility and accuracy were key considerations during development, particularly given the clinic?s range of services.

Healthcare websites present unique challenges related to trust, privacy, clarity, and accessibility, according to Mountaintop Web Design. The agency stated that the Parker Integrative Health project was approached with those considerations in mind, prioritizing straightforward communication over promotional messaging.

Parker Integrative Health plans to use the new website as its primary digital resource for communicating with current and prospective patients. The platform is expected to evolve as the clinic updates services and operational information. Mountaintop Web Design indicated that it will continue to support the website following launch as part of an ongoing partnership.

The website is now live and accessible to the public. Additional updates may be introduced over time as Parker Integrative Health evaluates site performance and user needs.
