Expo Productions Expands Services Across Colorado with New Regional Production Capabilities

January 20, 2026

Brighton, Colorado - January 20, 2026 -
Expo Productions has announced the expansion of its video production services across Colorado, establishing new production capabilities in multiple regions throughout the state. The Denver-based company is extending its reach beyond the metropolitan area to serve businesses in Colorado Springs, Fort Collins, Boulder, and the Western Slope region.

The expansion includes the deployment of mobile production units equipped with professional filming equipment, allowing the company to provide on-location services throughout Colorado. The initiative responds to increased demand from businesses outside the Denver metro area seeking professional video production without the logistics and costs associated with traveling to centralized studios.

"This expansion represents a significant step in making professional video production accessible to businesses throughout Colorado," said Matthew Jackson, founder of Expo Productions. "By establishing regional production capabilities, we can serve clients directly in their communities while maintaining the same production standards we've developed over years of operation."

The company has added production teams in key Colorado markets, each equipped with 4K cameras, professional lighting systems, and mobile editing capabilities. These teams can handle various video production needs, including corporate communications, training materials, promotional content, and event documentation. The expansion also includes partnerships with local venues and facilities to provide indoor filming locations when needed.

Expo Productions Company Videos now encompass services delivered across the state's diverse geographic regions. From the Eastern Plains to the Rocky Mountain communities, the company's expanded footprint allows businesses to access professional video production regardless of their location. The regional teams undergo the same training and follow standardized production processes established at the Denver headquarters.

The timing of the expansion aligns with broader trends in corporate communications, where video content has become integral to business operations. Colorado businesses increasingly require video for employee training, stakeholder communications, product demonstrations, and digital marketing. The geographic expansion addresses the challenge many businesses face in accessing quality video production services outside major urban centers.

The company's service expansion includes pre-production planning, filming, and post-production editing delivered locally. Each regional team can handle complete projects from initial concept through final delivery, eliminating the need for clients to coordinate with multiple vendors or travel to distant production facilities. Services range from half-day shoots for simple projects to multi-day productions for comprehensive video campaigns.

"Geographic barriers should not limit access to professional video production," added Jackson. "Our expansion ensures that a business in Durango has the same opportunity to create quality video content as one in downtown Denver."

The infrastructure supporting the expansion includes cloud-based collaboration tools that allow seamless coordination between regional teams and the central production facility. This technology enables rapid file sharing, remote editing capabilities, and consistent quality control across all locations.

Expo Productions specializes in creating video content for corporate, commercial, and event applications. The company provides services including advertising videos, corporate communications, training materials, real estate showcases, and event coverage. Founded in Denver, the company has developed expertise across multiple industries while maintaining a focus on storytelling and technical quality. The current expansion marks the company's first systematic effort to establish permanent production capabilities throughout Colorado.
