Brusco Vision Explains LASIK Affordability for Federal Employees Without FEDVIP Coverage

January 13, 2026

FALLS CHURCH, VA - January 13, 2026 -
A new article from Brusco Vision, "Can You Get LASIK for Vision Correction While on Federal Employees Dental and Vision Insurance Program (FEDVIP)", addresses a frequent concern among federal employees who are considering LASIK: whether this procedure is covered by their federal vision insurance. As more individuals seek long-term alternatives to glasses and contacts, many are surprised to learn that FEDVIP plans do not cover LASIK, categorizing it as an elective procedure rather than essential medical care. This clarification is critical for federal employees trying to understand their benefits and explore practical ways to finance vision correction.

The article notes that while FEDVIP supports routine eye exams, glasses, and contact lenses, it excludes surgical options like LASIK. Some plans may offer limited discounts through affiliated retail providers, but these discounts typically do not make a meaningful impact on total LASIK costs. Brusco Vision emphasizes the importance of understanding these limitations upfront, which allows prospective patients to proactively consider alternative funding strategies that fit within their personal budgets and long-term vision goals.

In the absence of FEDVIP coverage, federal employees often turn to pre-tax medical spending options such as Health Savings Accounts (HSA) and Flexible Spending Accounts (FSA) to pay for LASIK. The article confirms that both HSA and FSA funds can be used for the procedure, and doing so often results in reduced overall costs due to the tax advantages of these accounts. Because LASIK qualifies as a health-related expense, patients can apply funds from these accounts during the year or plan their procedures around open enrollment to optimize timing. Brusco Vision routinely assists patients in evaluating how to coordinate their benefits with surgical scheduling.

The article also highlights that financing remains a viable option for patients who prefer to spread the cost over time. Brusco Vision partners with reputable lenders who offer monthly payment plans designed to accommodate a range of financial situations. This allows patients to move forward with LASIK when they are ready, rather than delaying care due to budget concerns. Combining financing with HSA or FSA funds is a strategy many patients use to reduce upfront expenses while maintaining financial flexibility.

LASIK continues to be viewed as a long-term medical investment rather than a cosmetic procedure, especially for those aiming to reduce dependence on corrective lenses and avoid the recurring costs associated with glasses and contact lenses. While not deemed medically necessary under federal guidelines, the benefits of LASIK often align with patients? goals for improving daily comfort and visual clarity. The article explains how Brusco Vision supports patients in weighing the financial and medical aspects of this decision through transparent evaluations and education.

The article also answers common questions, such as whether pre-LASIK evaluations are covered by FEDVIP (they are not), how patients can combine payment options, and how timing surgery around benefit cycles may help. It stresses that while insurance coverage may not apply, the right information can help patients make informed decisions about their vision and finances.

Dr. Michael Brusco, founder and medical director of Brusco Vision, stated, ?Federal employees are often under the impression that FEDVIP includes LASIK coverage. Our goal is to provide clarity and empower patients with straightforward financial pathways to achieve their vision goals.? He added, ?We believe every patient deserves full transparency around insurance limitations and practical solutions for accessing premium vision correction.?

Brusco Vision?s commitment to education and transparency continues to shape how patients approach vision correction. For federal employees, understanding the limitations of FEDVIP is a critical first step. As interest in LASIK continues to grow, so does the need for clear, accessible information about payment options and medical planning. The article "Can You Get LASIK for Vision Correction While on Federal Employees Dental and Vision Insurance Program (FEDVIP)" provides timely guidance for those navigating their benefits while exploring permanent alternatives to glasses and contact lenses.
