SERVPRO of Port Huron Maintains Year-Round Preparedness in Property Restoration Services

January 16, 2026

KIMBALL, MI - January 16, 2026 -
SERVPRO of Port Huron upholds operational readiness throughout the year as part of standard practices in the cleanup and restoration industry. The local franchise focuses on consistent preparation to address a range of property damage scenarios through trained personnel, maintained equipment, and established processes. This approach aligns with industry norms for restoration providers, ensuring teams remain capable of handling residential and commercial property needs independent of specific events or seasonal variations.

The restoration field requires ongoing attention to training and resource management. SERVPRO franchises, including the Port Huron location, participate in structured programs developed at the national level. These include initial training at corporate facilities and continued education through IICRC-industry certification courses offered year-round. Staff members receive instruction in areas such as water damage restoration, fire damage restoration, and related mitigation techniques. This training supports the application of standardized methods across various damage types, from structural issues to contents handling.

Equipment readiness forms another core element of operational planning. Restoration teams maintain advanced tools and technology designed for cleanup and recovery tasks. These resources undergo regular checks to support effective deployment when needed. The combination of prepared equipment and certified personnel allows franchises to follow established protocols for documenting, mitigating, and restoring properties.

SERVPRO of Port Huron serves multiple communities in Michigan, including Port Huron, Marysville, Fort Gratiot Township, Kimball, Lakeport, Clyde Township, Allenton, Jeddo, Yale, and Capac. The franchise provides cleanup and restoration for residential and commercial properties affected by fire, smoke, water damage, mold, and mildew. Additional capabilities cover biohazard and crime scene remediation, carpet and upholstery cleaning, ceiling, floor, and wall restoration, contents packout and handling, virus and pathogen cleaning, odor removal, roof tarping and board-up, sewage cleanup, and vandalism or graffiti mitigation. As part of the broader SERVPRO network, the local team operates within a system of qualified franchises capable of addressing damage of varying scales.

Industry practices emphasize the value of proactive planning in restoration operations. Local teams develop and refine workflows that prioritize safety, efficiency, and thorough documentation. These processes draw from national guidelines and ongoing training to maintain consistency. Restoration providers like SERVPRO of Port Huron integrate these elements into daily operations to support reliable service delivery across a spectrum of potential property damage situations.

Joshua A. Ingersoll, Owner of SERVPRO of Port Huron, stated that consistent training and equipment maintenance represent fundamental aspects of the restoration process. He noted that year-round focus on these areas enables teams to apply standardized approaches effectively regardless of timing or circumstances.

Dean M. Dingman, Owner of SERVPRO of Port Huron, added that operational preparedness involves regular review of protocols and resources. He emphasized that such practices help ensure teams can implement industry-accepted methods for mitigating and restoring properties in a structured manner.

Eric D. Chesser, Owner of SERVPRO of Port Huron, highlighted the importance of sustained readiness in supporting comprehensive restoration efforts. He explained that ongoing preparation aligns with established industry expectations for handling diverse damage scenarios through trained staff and appropriate tools.

SERVPRO maintains a franchise model with more than 2,360 locations across the United States and Canada. The company has operated in the cleanup and restoration sector since 1967, focusing on fire, water, mold, storm, and specialty cleaning services for residential and commercial properties. National resources include a dedicated training center that supports franchise teams through hands-on programs and certification pathways. This structure enables local franchises to deliver services in accordance with industry standards while remaining independently owned and operated.
